STATEMENT OF RELATED CASES

There have been no previous appeals in this case. This Court's decision may affect the disposition of Plaintiff-Appellant's pending motions to intervene and for injunctive relief in Nez Perce v. Salazar, Case No. 06-CV-2239 (U.S.D.D.C.), a trust fund mismanagement suit by the Klamath Indian Tribes involving trust accounts that were the subject of Plaintiff-Appellant's proposed amended claims in this case below.

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

Jurisdiction in the Court of Federal Claims was invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1505. Plaintiff is an identifiable group American Indians. Defendant is the United States of America. Plaintiff's claims arise under federal statutes.

Jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(3). A final judgment was entered by the Court of Federal Claims in this action on July 17, 2012 after two opinions, one on February 11, 2011, 97 Fed. Cl. 203, and one on July 16, 2012, --- Fed. Cl. ---, 2012 WL 2878551. Appellant's notice of appeal was timely filed on August 13, 2012. See Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(B). This appeal is from a final judgment that disposed of all of Appellant's claims below.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

Plaintiff's action below involved claims to enforce the statutory rights of the 2,133 men, women and children listed by the Federal government as the final enrolled members of the terminated Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians in 1954. Those rights were established by the Klamath Termination Act of 1954, the Klamath Distribution Act of 1965, and the Klamath Restoration Act of 1986. The Termination Act transferred all rights in tribal property to the final enrollees, including the right to bring tribal claims against the United States after termination. The Distribution Act provided for the disbursal of awards so obtained, and for supplementing the litigation fund used to pay the costs of future claims. The Restoration Act of 1986 restored federal recognition to the Klamath Indians and preserved the pre-restoration property rights of the final enrollees.

The Court of Federal Claims found that the Klamath Indian Tribes, restored to federal recognition in 1986, was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b) without whom Plaintiff's action should not proceed. The court dismissed Plaintiff's complaint and denied its pending request to amend the complaint as moot. The issues presented are:

1. Whether the CFC applied the wrong analysis in this Circuit for determining when an absent party has a legally protectable interest in the statutory claims of a plaintiff under RCFC 19(a).

2. Whether the CFC's determination that the restored Tribe was an indispensable party without whom Plaintiff's action could not proceed under RCFC 19(b) impermissibly limits Congress' plenary power over Indian affairs.

3. Whether it was an abuse of discretion for the CFC to deny Plaintiff's motion to amend its complaint under RCFC 15(a) as "moot" in a nineteen-word footnote containing no further explanation and having no reference to or discussion of Plaintiff's proposed additional claims.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Plaintiff commenced its action in the Court of Federal Claims (“CFC”) on February 6, 2009. The complaint set forth claims for the taking of trust assets and the breach of fiduciary duties statutorily owed to the final enrollees of the terminated Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians under the Klamath Termination Act of 1954 (“Termination Act”),¹ the Klamath Restoration Act of 1986 (“Restoration Act”),² and the Klamath Treaty of 1864 (“1864 Treaty”).³ Plaintiff’s statutory claims arose out of Defendant’s failure to pay monies owing under Section 13 of the Termination Act (25 U.S.C. § 564l(c)) and for Defendant’s August 2008 removal of the Chiloquin Dam, a part of the Klamath Indian Irrigation Project, causing the loss of treaty-based fishing and water rights in which the final enrollees held an interest. A52. Plaintiff amended its complaint once as of right. A52. On May 7, 2009, Defendant filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim. A57. Oral argument on Defendant’s motion to dismiss occurred on April 19, 2010. A322.

On February 11, 2011, the CFC issued a published opinion dismissing Plaintiff's claims relating to the non-disbursement of funds and to the transfer and removal of the Chiloquin Dam for lack of jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2501. Klamath Tribe Claims Committee v. United States, 97 Fed. Cl. 203 (2011) ("Klamath I"). The court found that it had jurisdiction over the remaining claims, but determined sua sponte that the Klamath Indian Tribes, restored to federal recognition in 1986 (the "Tribe"), was a required party under RCFC 19(a) that could not be joined. A2. The court extended an invitation to the Tribe to intervene in the action, which the Tribe declined. See A361. The court proceeded to consider whether the restored Tribe was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b). A2.

In July 2011, Plaintiff retained substitute counsel, who entered their appearance. A369. The parties were ordered to respond to the Tribe's declination of the court's invitation to intervene, and to brief the issue of the Tribe's indispensability, A379, which the parties filed on September 26, 2011. A380, A466. On October 7, 2011, the restored Tribe sought leave to participate as amicus curiae. A491. The Tribe's motion was opposed by Plaintiff, supported by Defendant, and granted by the court on November 1, 2011. A494, A569. On April 24, 2012, Plaintiff sought leave to amend its complaint to allege further statutory claims arising under the Termination Act and the Klamath Distribution of Judgment Fund Act of 1965 (“Distribution Act”)⁴ relating to the final enrollees’ litigation fund, A629, A630, which Defendant opposed. A765.

By order issued July 16, 2012, the CFC held that the restored Tribe was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b) and dismissed Plaintiff’s complaint and denied its motion to amend the complaint as moot. Klamath Tribe Claims Committee v. United States, --- Fed. Cl. ---, 2012 WL 2878551 (Jul. 16, 2012) (“Klamath II”). Final judgment was entered on July 17, 2012. A13. The Committee timely filed its notice of appeal on August 13, 2012. A892.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

This matter arises out of the history of Federal relations with the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, recognized by treaty in 1864, terminated by Congress in 1954, and restored to recognition in 1986. At issue on appeal is whether the Court of Federal Claims erred as a matter of law in dismissing the complaint and denying the motion to amend by deciding that, for purposes of RCFC 19(a), the restored Tribe had a legally protectable interest in the statutory rights at issue in Plaintiff's existing and proposed amended claims. Congress defined those rights for the termination, post-termination and restoration eras in the three separate pieces of legislation: the Klamath Termination, Distribution, and Restoration Acts.

The Termination Act was enacted in 1954 to terminate federal supervision over the trust and restricted property of the tribe and its members and to terminate federal services provided to them because of their status as Indians. 25 U.S.C. § 564. The Act extinguished certain powers arising under tribal and federal laws. The Act acknowledged the ability of the final enrollees to act under the old tribal constitution after termination, provided such actions were not inconsistent with the Termination Act. 25 U.S.C. § 564r. Reciprocally, the Act "terminated" the powers of the Secretary or other officer of the United States to take, review, or approve any action under the tribe's constitution or bylaws. 25 U.S.C. § 564r.

The Termination Act permanently closed tribal membership as of August 13, 1954 (25 U.S.C. § 564b) and directed that all interests in tribal property be equally divided among the final enrollees. 25 U.S.C. § 564c. Upon publication of the final roll, the interest of each final enrollee in tribal property became heritable, personal property subject to state probate laws. 25 U.S.C. §§ 564c, 564h(b). The final roll was published in the Federal Register on November 21, 1957. 22 Fed. Reg. 9,303.

The Termination Act defined “tribal property” as “any real or personal property, including water rights, or any interest in real or personal property, that belongs to the tribe and either is held by the United States in trust for the tribe or is subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States.” 25 U.S.C. § 564a(d). It included the continuing right to bring tribal claims against the United States after termination. 25 U.S.C. § 564e(c).

Final enrollees were given two options for the distribution of tribal property by the Act. A final enrollee could participate in a plan for the future management of their share of tribal property by a private trustee, corporation, or other legal entity, or withdraw and have his or her interests in tribal property paid out in cash. 25 U.S.C. § 564d(a)(2), (5). The Act authorized the Secretary to sell tribal assets to provide the cash to pay withdrawing members. 25 U.S.C. § 564d(a). Of 2,133 final members, 1,660 withdrew. A4. The Act further provided that all final enrollees would share in the proceeds from future tribal claims against the United States regardless whether they remained or withdrew. 25 U.S.C. § 564e(c); see also 25 U.S.C. § 565 et seq.

The Termination Act directed the Secretary to transfer unrestricted control of funds or personal property held in trust by the United States to the final enrollees by August 13, 1958. 25 U.S.C. § 564g(a). It was “the intention of Congress” that all actions related to the transfer of tribal property be completed no later than August 13, 1961. 25 U.S.C. § 564e(b). The Secretary was required to publish a proclamation of termination once the transfer was completed. 25 U.S.C. § 564q(a). The proclamation of termination was published on August 12, 1961. 61 Fed. Reg. 7,362.

Pursuant to the rights granted by the Termination Act, the final enrollees, acting pursuant to their old constitution, established the Plaintiff Claims Committee in order to pursue tribal claims against the United States after termination, A216-220; see also 25 U.S.C. § 565 et seq. Membership on the committee was to be divided equally between withdrawing and remaining members. A218. The Committee has gone by different names over the years, including the Executive Committee (Claims), the Klamath Executive Committee on Claims, the Klamath Tribes Executive Committee on Claims, and the Klamath

Claims Committee.⁵ Since 1961, Plaintiff has successfully pursued numerous tribal claims against the United States on behalf of the final enrollees.⁶

In 1961 the final enrollees set aside $350,000 from tribal assets to pay the cost of pursuing tribal claims. A771 (citing S. Rep. No. 89-160 (1965)). The Secretary of the Interior (“Secretary”) agreed to hold and maintain the litigation fund, and has done so ever since. A771.

Congress in 1965 enacted the Klamath Distribution Act. 25 U.S.C. § 565 et seq. The Distribution Act reaffirmed the statutory right of the final enrollees to bring tribal claims against the United States. It established procedures for distributing judgment funds from such claims to the final enrollees and to the heirs and legatees of deceased final enrollees. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 565b (distribution procedures); 565a (distribution of award from Indian Claims Commission docket 100); 565c (distribution of funds from other judgments). It provided for the distribution to the final enrollees of any other funds held in the U.S. Treasury to the credit of the Klamath Tribe. 25 U.S.C. § 565c. The Act authorized the Secretary to withhold from distribution the funds “heretofore or hereafter set aside” to pay the usual and necessary expenses of prosecuting further claims against the United States. 25 U.S.C. § 565. See also 25 U.S.C. § 565c (same). The Bureau of Indian Affairs relied on the Distribution Act in the mid-1990s to distribute approximately $2.5 million of excess monies from the litigation fund to the final enrollees. A227-228.

Thirty-two years after termination, Congress restored federal recognition to the tribe and its members with the Klamath Restoration Act. Unlike other restoration legislation,⁷ the Restoration Act did not completely repeal the Termination Act.

The Act made applicable to the restored Tribe and its members “all laws and regulations of the United States of general application to Indians or nations, tribes, or bands of Indians” that were not “inconsistent with any specific provision” of the Restoration Act, and “[e]xcept “as otherwise provided” by the Act. 25 U.S.C. §

566(a). The Act restored to the Tribe those rights and privileges arising under “any “Federal treaty, Executive order, agreement, or statute, or any other Federal authority” that had been “diminished or lost” under the Termination Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(b). It rendered the provisions of the Termination Act inapplicable to the restored Tribe and its members after August 27, 1986 “to the extent that they are inconsistent” with the Restoration Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(b). The Act provided that nothing within it “shall alter any property right or obligation, any contractual right or obligation, or any obligation for taxes already levied.” 25 U.S.C. § 566(d) (“Certain rights not altered”).

Like the Termination Act, the Restoration Act incorporates the Klamath Constitution by reference. 25 U.S.C. § 566g(2), (5), (6); see 25 U.S.C. § 564r. The Act defines tribal “member” as persons eligible for enrollment under the Tribe’s constitution and bylaws. 25 U.S.C. § 566g. Under Article III of the Klamath Constitution, final enrollees are “automatically” enrolled as members. A605. That is not the case for their descendants. Under the Klamath Constitution, persons born after the closing of the final roll on August 13, 1954 may enroll in the restored Tribe only if they satisfy eligibility requirements and are approved by an enrollment committee. A605. The enrollment of such persons is for “Tribal purposes” only and would not affect their eligibility to receive funds from disbursements related to the “Termination Act or claims litigation.” A605.

On February 6, 2009, Plaintiff commenced this action to enforce the statutory rights of the final enrollees under the Termination Act and the 1864 Treaty. A38. The caption of the complaint incorrectly described Plaintiff as “Klamath Tribe Claims Committee,” notwithstanding that the body of the complaint referred correctly to the “Klamath Claims Committee.” A38, ¶ 2. Plaintiff amended the complaint and corrected the caption. A50. Plaintiff’s complaint alleged harms to those interests from the taking of trust assets and the breach of fiduciary duties related the loss of fishing and storage water rights from the removal of the Chiloquin Dam. A52. Defendant filed a motion to dismiss under RCFC 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). After delays due to the illness of Plaintiff’s counsel, A363, oral argument on the motion was conducted on April 19, 2010. A328.

The majority of the hearing was taken up with discussion of whether Plaintiff’s suit was authorized by the restored Tribe. The court and the attorneys for both sides discussed whether the restored Tribe was the real party in interest (see, e.g., A896, 935, 940, 954, 985, 1046); whether it should consider evidence outside the record to determine that issue (see, e.g., A923, 926, 944-946, 1013); who held the rights at issue (see, e.g., A959); whether Plaintiff was an arm of the restored Tribal government or not (see, e.g., A926, 930, 932-933, 977-978, 981); whether in deciding such issues the court was wading into intertribal disputes (see, e.g., A932-933); whether Defendant would be exposed to dual liability if Plaintiff and the restored Tribe each held the same claims (see, e.g., A1043-1044); and whether Plaintiff had any authority to bring restored Tribal claims (see, e.g., A936, 938, 959, 982-983, 1012, 1044, 1042).

The Defendant took the position that Plaintiff lacked any authority to bring claims on behalf of the restored Tribe (A936); that it could not allege injuries for claims it didn't possess (A959); that only the restored Tribe could bring claims in the post-restoration period (A1013); that what was really at issue was a dispute over who represents the restored Tribe (A932-933); and that to proceed with the claim, Plaintiff must provide a resolution from the restored Tribe's government expressly authorizing it bring this action.

Plaintiff's attorney of record directed the court's attention to the complaint itself, and to the terms of the Termination and Distribution Acts. A975, 1043. He explained that the Committee is a division of the "terminated tribe" established by the final enrollees (referred to in the complaint as the "54 members"). A977. He stated that the final enrollees were preserved by the Restoration Act. A977. He said that the status of the Committee was unchanged by the Restoration Act. A978. He confirmed that the restored Tribe issued no particular grant of authority to the Committee post-restoration. A982. He argued that Plaintiff had demonstrated that its authority arises under statute. A1043.

The court adopted Defendant's concerns as its own and, at the close of the hearing, ordered Plaintiff to file an affidavit or resolution from an appropriate restored Tribal official directly addressing Plaintiff's authority to file its claims. A1048, 1052, 1056; see also A332-333.

Plaintiff ultimately submitted a copy of a letter sent by the restored Tribe's Chairman to the chairman of the Claims Committee declining to provide the requested affidavit "for lack of authority." A331. In addition, the Tribal Chairman's letter asserted: (1) that the Plaintiff Committee was established during termination before the tribe's recognition was restored; (2) that Plaintiff was not a committee under the Klamath Constitution; (3) that the final enrollees are different from the restored Tribe's membership (known as the Tribe's "General Council"); (4) that historically Plaintiff was not directly accountable to the restored Tribal government; and (5) that Plaintiff's action "may potentially affect Tribal rights" of the enrolled members. Id. The health of Plaintiff's counsel deteriorated thereafter and he passed away on February 6, 2011. A363, A377.

On February 11, 2011, the court granted Defendant's motion to dismiss as to claims relating to the disbursement of funds under the Termination Act and the transfer of title to the Chiloquin Dam for being outside the statute of limitations set by 28 U.S.C. § 2501. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. 203 (2011). The CFC determined it had jurisdiction over the remaining treaty-based fishing and water rights claims under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1491, 1505, and 2501. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 210.

The restored Tribe did not request leave to intervene for the limited purpose of asserting an interest in the action, and the Defendant never requested joinder of the restored Tribe as a required party. Nevertheless, the court determined, sua sponte,⁸ that that the restored Tribe was a required party under RCFC 19(a)(1) because the court could not afford complete relief in the restored Tribe's absence and because the Tribe claimed an interest in the subject matter of the lawsuit. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212-13.

The court premised its conclusion on "uncontested" facts: (1) that the membership and interests of the final enrollees and the restored Tribe overlapped; (2) that the rights Plaintiff sought to vindicate were "those same rights and associated fiduciary obligations" held by the restored Tribe under the 1864 Treaty; and (3) that the Tribal Chairman claimed the action would affect Tribal rights. Id. at 212. None of these facts were alleged by Plaintiff in its original or amended complaints.

Because of its sovereign immunity, the court invited the restored Tribe to intervene after which, if declined, the court would consider whether the Tribe was indispensable under RCFC 19(b). Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 214. In September ⁸ The court stated that Defendant's briefs had challenged Plaintiff's authority to sue without the restored Tribe. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212.

2011, after Plaintiff retained substitute counsel, the parties briefed the issue of the restored Tribe's indispensability. A380, A466. Thereafter the restored Tribe, having declined the court's invitation to intervene, A361, sought leave to file a brief as an amicus, A491, a request granted over Plaintiff's opposition. A494.

While the indispensability question was pending, Plaintiff sought leave to amend its complaint to assert takings and breach of trust claims arising out of Defendant's handling of the final enrollees' litigation fund. A630. The proposed amended complaint alleged that Plaintiff had recently denied Plaintiff access to the litigation fund for the purpose of paying the costs of Plaintiff's action. A757. In opposing the motion, Defendant admitted that it had long provided litigation fund account information to the restored Tribe (A773-774); asserted it held the fund for exclusive benefit of the Tribe (A770); and stated that the fund was the subject of the Tribe's pending trust mismanagement suit in the District Court for the District of Columbia in Nez Perce, et al. v. Salazar, et al., Case No. 06-cv-2239. A790. In light of this new information, Plaintiff on June 4, 2012 filed a motion pursuant to FRCP 24(a) to intervene in the District Court action seeking to determine whether any other statutory interests of the final enrollees were also the subject matter of that action, and to enjoin the United States to preserve and maintain any and all records and communications relating thereto. Plaintiff's motion is still pending.

On July 16, 2012 the CFC issued a second opinion in the case, dismissing Plaintiff's remaining claims and denying its motion to amend as moot on the basis that the restored Tribe was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b) without whom the action should not go forward. Klamath II, --- Fed. Cl. ---, 2012 WL 2878551 (2012). Applying the RCFC 19(b) factors to Plaintiff's surviving claims, the CFC found that Plaintiff's inability to seek compensation in the event of dismissal of those claims was outweighed by the sovereign interests of the restored Tribe. Klamath II at *7. The court found that proceeding without the Tribe could practically impair the Tribe's ability to protect its sovereign interests. Id. at *8. Even without direct preclusive effect against the Tribe, the court held, a ruling "would be a negative precedent" confronting the Tribe in future litigation that could "ripen into binding adverse precedent" were the CFC's ruling affirmed by the Federal Circuit. Id. Adding weight to the CFC's decision was that disposition in the Tribe's absence could subject Defendant to multiple and conflicting claims with respect to Plaintiff's surviving claims to the extent the "different" memberships of the final enrollees and the Tribe "assert at least partially overlapping claims" to the same statutory rights. Klamath II at *9. The CFC noted that if the Tribe had intervened, determining how to allocate any resulting award would require the CFC "to wade into disputes" amongst all the parties. Klamath II at n. 19.

The CFC did not explain its application of the Rule 19 analysis to Plaintiff's proposed amended claims relating to the litigation fund. In the opinion's final footnote, the court simply stated that "[b]ecause of this ruling, the court will deny, as moot, a motion filed by plaintiff to amend its complaint." Klamath II at n. 22. That is the entirety of the court's analysis with respect to Plaintiff's proposed amended claims.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Termination Era is a period in American history when the Federal Government sought to assimilate tribes into mainstream society by eliminating their federal rights as Indians. The era wound to a close in the 1960s, after which Congress began the slow and uneven process of restoring recognition to some tribes.

This case is a legacy of the Termination Era. It concerns the scope of the statutory rights of the members of the terminated Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians after termination. The court below dismissed Plaintiff's existing and proposed amended claims on the basis that the restored Klamath Indian Tribes was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b) without whom the action could not go forward. The dismissal was predicated on the CFC's earlier determination that the Tribe was a required party under RCFC 19(a) that would not intervene and that could not be joined because of tribal sovereign immunity.

1. The CFC applied the wrong test for determining whether the Tribe had a legally protectable interest in Plaintiff's statutory claims. Under the law in this Circuit, that analysis should have begun with a consideration of the substance of Plaintiff's claims not, as the CFC did, on the bare claim of interest asserted by Defendant on behalf of the Tribe. Nor did it consider, as it should first have done, the statutory interests at issue in Plaintiff's claims. Instead the CFC focused on the Tribe's interests arising under treaty, on the overlapping memberships of Plaintiff and the restored Tribe, and on the refusal of the Tribal Chairman to authorize Plaintiff's suit. The CFC decision implies that the Restoration Act gives the restored Tribe a retroactive interest in the statutory rights of the final enrollees. Had the CFC applied the proper 19(a) analysis, it would have found that the statutory rights Plaintiff sought to vindicate in its action were property interests that Congress vested in the final enrollees at termination, and that those interests included the right to bring tribal claims arising under treaty against the United States. Congress elaborated and expanded those rights after termination, and narrowed and preserved them after restoration. The fact that such rights are exclusive to the final enrollees would have obviated the need to consider the restored Tribe's interests at all.

2. Assuming the restored Tribe had any legally protectable interest in Plaintiff's claims – which it did not – the CFC failed to account for the fact that the RCFC 19(b) analysis in this case required the court to balance the interests of two differently weighted sovereignties: that of the restored Tribe claiming an interest in Plaintiff's claims, and that of the United States Congress, which created and preserved the statutory rights of final enrollees. Tribal immunity exists at the sufferance of Congress, whose plenary power over Indian Affairs reflects the hierarchy of their respective authorities. In weighing the equities and dismissing under RCFC 19(b) because proceeding without the restored Tribe would practically impair the Tribe's ability to protect its sovereign interests, the Court of Federal Claims turned this hierarchy on its head.

3. The CFC's denial of Plaintiff's motion for leave to amend its complaint to assert claims arising from the handling of the litigation fund over the years, a trust property in which the final proposed held exclusive rights, was contained in a nineteen-word footnote that disposed of the motion as "moot." It contained no reference or description of Plaintiff's proposed amended claims. If the reason for the court's denial was that the restored Tribe claimed an interest in the litigation fund, then, under this Circuit's precedent, the court should have considered the nature of Plaintiff's proposed amended claims. Had the court done so, it would have found it impossible for the Tribe to possess any legally protectable interest in the subject of the proposed amended claims absent Congressional authorization.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

1. RCFC 19

This Circuit has not decided whether RCFC 19 determinations by the Court of Federal Claims are reviewed de novo or for abuse of discretion. United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians v. United States, 480 F.3d 1318, 1324 n.2

(Fed. Cir. 2007). Because RCFC is “virtually identical” to Fed.R.Civ.P. 19, this Circuit looks to cases interpreting FRCP 19 for its analysis. United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians, 480 F.3d at 1324 n.2. See also Pacific Nat’l Cellular v. United States, 41 Fed. Cl. 20, 25 n.3 (1998). Other circuits review 19(a) determinations for abuse of discretion, but review any legal conclusions supporting such determinations de novo. See, e.g., Davis v. U.S., 192 F.3d 951, 957 n. 3 (10th Cir. 1999); Cloverleaf Standardbred Owners Association, Inc. v. National Bank, 699 F.2d 1274, 1276-77 (D.C.Cir.1983); Walsh v. Centeio, 692 F.2d 1239, 1241-43 (9th Cir.1982). Findings of fact underlying a Rule 19 determination must be reviewed for clear error. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, PA v. Rite Aid of South Carolina, Inc., 210 F.3d 246, 250 n. 7 (4th Cir. 2000). While there is disagreement as to the appropriate standard to apply to Rule 19(b) determinations, see Id. (collecting different circuit standards applied to FRCP 19(b) determinations), most circuits review a determination of indispensability for abuse of discretion. Extra Equipamentos E Exportacao Ltda. v. Case Corp., 361 F.3d 359, 361 (7th Cir. 2004). See also Republic of Philippines v. Pimentel, 553 U.S. 851, 864, 128 S. Ct. 2180, 2189, 171 L. Ed. 2d 131 (2008) (“The case-specific inquiry of Rule 19(b) implies some degree of deference to the district court.”) As with FRCP 19(a), findings of law implicit in a 19(b) determination are reviewed de novo. Pimentel, 553 U.S. at 864, citing Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 99-

100, 116 S.Ct. 2035, 135 L.Ed.2d 392 (1996) (a court “by definition abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law”). See also Davis v. U.S., 192 F.3d 951, 957 (10th Cir. 1999); Janney Montgomery Scott, Inc. v. Shepard Niles, Inc., 11 F.3d 399, 404 (3rd Cir. 1993) (finding district court’s conclusion under 19(b) that a decision could become persuasive precedent against absent party was a conclusion of law subject to plenary review).

The denial of a motion to amend the complaint is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Kalman v. Berlyn Corp., 914 F.2d 1473, 1480 (Fed. Cir. 1990) opinion clarified, 89-1371, 1991 WL 345039 (Fed. Cir. Mar. 4, 1991) (review of denial of motion to amend limited to whether court abused its discretion), citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962). An abuse of discretion may be found upon a showing that the court made a clear error of judgment in weighing relevant factors or exercised its discretion based upon an error of law or clearly erroneous factual findings. Acumed LLC v. Stryker Corp., 551 F.3d 1323, 1327 (Fed. Cir. 2008), citing Innogenetics, N.V. v. Abbott Labs., 512 F.3d 1363, 1379 (Fed. Cir. 2008), reh’g and reh’g en banc denied. The refusal to grant leave to amend without any justifying reason appearing for the denial is an abuse of discretion and inconsistent with the spirit of the Federal Rules. Veridyne Corp. v. United States, 86 Fed. Cl. 668, 677(2009), citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962). See also

Caribbean Broadcasting System, Ltd. v. Cable Wireless P.L.C., 148 F.3d 1080, 1083 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (failure to provide a sufficient reason for denial is abuse of discretion). Denial of leave to amend based on futility is warranted if the proposed claim would not survive a motion to dismiss. James Madison Ltd. v. Ludwig, 82 F.3d 1085, 1099 (D.C. Cir. 1996); Pietsch v. McKissack & McKissack, 677 F. Supp. 2d 325, 328 (D.D.C. 2010). Denial of a leave to amend for futility is reviewed de novo. Watson ex rel. Watson v. ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS APPLIED THE WRONG TEST IN THIS CIRCUIT FOR DETERMINING AN “INTEREST” UNDER RCFC 19(a).

The CFC’s dismissal of Plaintiff’s claims and its denial of Plaintiff’s motion to amend relied on its determination that the restored Tribe has a legally protectable interest in the subject matter of Plaintiff’s action, and that the court could not accord complete relief as to the existing parties. The CFC simply presumed, without examination, that the rights Plaintiff sought to enforce belonged to the restored Tribe. In doing so the CFC improperly conflated the distinct statutory rights of the final enrollees with the separate sovereign rights of the newly restored Tribe arising on August 27, 1986. Had the CFC considered the statutory bases of Plaintiff’s claims, as it should have, it could not have held the Tribe to be a required party.

A. The “Interest” Analysis In The Federal Circuit Starts With The Plaintiff’s Complaint, Not The Absentee’s Claims.

Rule 19(a)(1) provides in relevant part that a required party shall be joined as a party to an action if:

- (A) in that person's absence, the court cannot accord complete relief among the existing parties; or
- (B) that person claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and is so situated that disposing of the action in the person's absence may:

- (i) as a practical matter impair or impede the person's ability to protect the interest; or
 - (ii) leave an existing party subject to a substantial risk of incurring double, multiple, or otherwise inconsistent obligations because of the interest.
- RCFC 19(a) (1) (“Required Party”).⁹

The test in this Circuit for determining when an absent party has a legally protectable interest for purposes of RCFC 19(a) was set forth in United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians v. United States, 480 F.3d 1318 (Fed. Cir. 2007).

United Keetoowah Band was an appeal from a dismissal of an action under RCFC 19(b) for the inability to join a tribe as a necessary party. As here, that case involved a claim arising under federal legislation. The relevant statute in that case settled different claims brought by three tribes against the Federal Government for the mismanagement of certain riverbed lands in Oklahoma (the “Settlement Act”).¹⁰ In addition to settling the tribes’ claims, the Settlement Act extinguished any related claims of any tribe that was not named in the Act if such claims were not filed within 180 days of its enactment, United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1321-22, and set aside temporarily a portion of the settlement proceeds for use in paying any judgment that might result from such a timely-filed claim. United Keetoowah Band, citing 25 U.S.C. § 1779f.

⁹ RCFC 19(a) (1). Cf. Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 19(a)(1). Kimball I refers to RCFC 19(a)(1) and (a)(2) as the “first” and “second” joinder standards, respectively. See, e.g. Kimball I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 211. It refers to RCFC 19(a)(1) as titled “Joinder of Persons Needed for Just Adjudication.” Id. at 210. RCFC 19(a)(1) is currently titled “Persons Required to Be Joined if Feasible,” and 19(a)(2) is captioned “Joinder by Court Order.” RCFC 19 was amended in 2008 to conform to the general restyling of the FRCP, resulting in a renumbering of the rule’s provisions. Unless the context dictates otherwise, Plaintiff-Appellant assumes that Klamath I’s references are intended to be to RCFC 19(a)(1)(A) and 19(a)(1)(B), respectively.

The United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians of Oklahoma (“UKB”) was a non-settling tribe that filed an action in the Court of Federal Claims under the Act. United Keetoowah Band, Id. at 1322. In response, the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, a tribe named in the Act, filed a limited motion to intervene under RCFC 24(a) in order to file a motion to dismiss under RCFC 19. Id. The Cherokee Nation argued that it was a necessary and indispensable party since it was the sole titleholder to the riverbed lands identified in the Act and since UKB’s action was essentially a claim against the Cherokee Nation. Id. The CFC agreed and dismissed UKB’s claims. Id.

This Court reversed on appeal on the basis that the Cherokee Nation had no legally protectable interest under RCFC 19(a) in UKB’s statutory claims. This Court began its analysis by noting that it had never directly defined the “interest” requirement of RCFC 19(a). United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1324. It had, however, defined what it found to be an equivalent interest analysis under RCFC

24(a), RCFC 19(a)’s “counterpart,” id. at n. 4, which it adopted as the standard for RCFC 19(a). Id.

This Court determined that a “legally protectable interest” under RCFC 19(a) must be one “which the substantive law recognizes as belonging to or being owned by the applicant.” United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1327, citing Am. Mar. Transp., Inc. v. United States, 870 F.2d 1559, 1562 (Fed.Cir.1989). Such an interest cannot be “indirect or contingent,” but must be “of such a direct and immediate character” that the absentee will either “gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment.” United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1325 (internal quotations omitted), citing Davis v. United States, 192 F.3d 951, 959 (10th Cir.1999) (interest claimed cannot be “fabricated” or “frivolous”); Ramah Navajo Sch. Bd., Inc. v. Babbitt, 87 F.3d 1338, 1351 (D.C.Cir.1996) (interest must be a “legally protected interest”); Keweenaw Bay Indian Cmty. v. Mich., 11 F.3d 1341, 1347 (6th Cir.1993) (interest must be a legally protected interest that would be impaired by a judgment in the case); Makah Indian Tribe v. Verity, 910 F.2d 555, 558 (9th Cir.1990) (interest must be “more than a financial stake” and “more than speculation about a future event”).

The CFC’s analysis in United Keetoowah had started by characterizing the interests claimed by the Cherokee Nation. United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1326. Rejecting that approach, this Court held instead that the proper analysis begins “by correctly characterizing the pending action between those already parties to the action,” and not with the absentee’s interests. Id. (emphasis added).

Turning to the claims of the petition, which concerned the Settlement Act’s extinguishment of riverbed-related claims and for which UKB sought compensation, id. at 1326, this Court found that the subject of UKB’s action was limited to statutory claims arising under the Settlement Act, in which the Cherokee Nation lacked a direct interest. Id. at 1327. The Court further determined that the interest claimed by the Cherokee Nation in retaining exclusive rights and title to the riverbed lands was indirect and contingent since the Nation would neither gain nor lose its title if UKB won money damages, the only type of relief available to UKB in the Court of Federal Claims. Id.

II. THE COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS IMPROPERLY PUT THE CLAIMED INTEREST OF AN ABSENTEE AHEAD OF THE STATUTORY RIGHTS OF THE PLAINTIFF.

That United Keetoowah standard guides the review in this case. The Court of Federal Claims in Klamath I improperly began its RCFC 19(a) analysis by finding that the “interest” analysis “focuses more on the interests of those not before the court.” Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 211. See also at n. 14 (among RCFC 19(a)’s concerns are “that the absentee’s ability to protect its interests may be impaired or impeded by a ruling”). This is directly contrary to the teaching of United Keetoowah, and was precisely the same error reversed in that case.

The CFC here never looked to the statutory bases of Plaintiff's existing and proposed claims. Its finding that the restored Tribe claimed a legally protectable interest under RCFC 19(a)(1)(B) relied instead on what the court deemed "essentially uncontested" facts: that the memberships of the final enrollees and the restored Tribe overlapped;¹¹ that the "interests" of the final enrollees and the Tribe also overlapped, "particularly after the passage of the Restoration Act in 1986"; that the Tribe lacked control over Plaintiff or Plaintiff's claims, and that Plaintiff's claims could "potentially affect" rights of the Tribe's entire enrolled membership; and that the statutory rights Plaintiff sought to vindicate were the same treaty-based rights and associated fiduciary obligations now held by the restored Tribe. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212-213. These same findings informed the CFC's subsequent rulings that the restored Tribe was an indispensable party under RCFC 19(b), and that Plaintiff's proposed amended complaint was moot. See Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 (Jul. 16, 2012).

The restored Tribe never claimed any specific interest in the subject matter of Plaintiff's existing or proposed claims. The only assertion by the Tribe of an interest was contained in a letter from the Tribal Chairman to Plaintiff asserting that the action "may potentially affect Tribal rights" without specifying what they were. A331. As the hearing transcript from the argument on Defendant's motion to dismiss shows, it was Defendant who repeatedly asserted that the rights Plaintiff sought to assert were rights belonging to the restored Tribe. (A929-930, 936, 938, 959).

The CFC presumed that the statutory rights Plaintiff sought to vindicate were rights that belonged to the Tribe. By doing so the CFC conflated entirely distinct and mutually exclusive rights while ignoring the significant differences in federal law between the rights of a recognized tribe and the rights of a tribe whose federal recognition has been terminated. Klamath II provides evidence of this presumption. There the CFC held that "the Klamath Claims Committee believed that it had broad authority to represent the Tribes and its members in tribal litigation." Klamath II at *3. The CFC pointed to resolutions adopted during the termination era to show the Committee's and the restored Tribe's overlapping interests.

During termination, the final enrollees gave the Committee broad authority to represent the final enrollees' interests which, after termination, included the right to bring tribal claims. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 564e(c); 565 et seq. The Committee did claim to act for the rights of the terminated tribe in this era. That is what Congress intended and that is what the Termination and Distribution Acts allowed. The CFC wrongly assumed, however, for purposes of enforcing federal rights, that “tribe” had the same legal significance after 1961 as it did after 1986. Had that been the case, there would have been no need for restoration at all.

At the hearing on Defendant’s motion to dismiss the complaint, the CFC and the Defendant presumed from the outset that the rights Plaintiff sought to vindicate in its action belonged to the restored Tribe. The court’s extended questioning, which focused on whether the Committee was authorized to bring claims on the Tribe’s behalf, makes clear that the CFC had already implicitly concluded that Plaintiff’s claims involved exclusively rights of the restored Tribe. The court at length discussed with the attorneys for both sides whether the Tribe was the real party in interest (see, e.g., A896, 935, 940, 954, 985, 1046); whether Plaintiff was an arm of the restored Tribal government (see, e.g., A926, 930, 932-933, 977-978, 981); whether this was an intertribal dispute (see, e.g., A932-933); and whether Plaintiff was authorized to bring Tribal claims (see, e.g., A936, 938, 959, 982-983, 1012, 1044, 1042). Relying on the assumption that Plaintiff sought to enforce the Tribe’s rights, the CFC ultimately ordered Plaintiff to produce an affidavit from a Tribal official proving Plaintiff’s authority to bring its suit. That simply presumed the very issue that the court is required to demonstrate under RCFC (a)(1). United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians v. United States, 480 F.3d 1318 (Fed. Cir. 2007).

The hearing also made clear the reason for the court's error. The CFC, like Defendant, thought that a tribe is a tribe is a tribe, and that any "tribal" claims pursued by the Committee necessarily belonged to the restored Tribe. That is simply ignores the plain text of the Klamath Termination, Distribution, and Restoration Acts (discussion). Had the CFC looked where it should to the character of Plaintiff's actual and proposed claims, the court would have understood that Congress (1) granted a personal property right in the final enrollees to bring "tribal claims" after termination, (2) preserved that right after restoration, and (3) limited that right after restoration to the right to bring tribal claims for harms arising before August 27, 1986, when the Restoration Act took effect.

A. The Klamath Termination Act Established The Final Enrollees' Right To Bring Tribal Claims After Termination.

The statutory right of the final enrollees to bring tribal claims against the United States for harms occurring before August 27, 1986 was established by the Termination Act. The Termination Act directed that a final roll of the 2,133 men, women, and children comprising the terminated tribe's members as of midnight on August 13, 1954 each receive an equal share in tribal property. 25 U.S.C. § 564b. Upon publication of the final roll in 1957, all rights or beneficial interests of the final enrollees in tribal property became personal property. 25 U.S.C. §§ 564c; 22 Fed. Reg. 9,303 (Nov. 21, 1957) ("Members of Klamath Tribe of Indians Notice of Final Roll). The personal property interest of each final enrollee was heritable, and subject to state probate laws at the same time. 25 U.S.C. §§ 564c, 564h(b). See also Klamath and Modoc Tribe v. United States, 436 F.2d 1008, 1011 (Ct. Cl. 1971) (publication of final roll rendered enrollees' rights in tribal property personal property that was descendible and devisable). Because it is settled that individual vested rights in tribal property are not created in Indians until promulgation of the final roll. Klamath and Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1027, citing Choctaw Nation v. United States, 100 F.Supp. 318, 320-22 (Ct. Cl. 1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 955, 72 S.Ct. 1050 (1952), it is therefore also clear that the rights of the final enrollees are vested.

The transfer of the terminated tribe's property to the final enrollees was a condition for completing termination. 25 U.S.C. § 564e(b) (expressing "the intention of Congress" that all actions related to the transfer of tribal property be completed by August 13, 1961). Only after that was done could the Secretary publish the final proclamation of the tribe's termination, 25 U.S.C. § 564q(a). See 26 Fed. Reg. 7,362 (Aug. 12, 1961) (proclamation of Klamath termination).

Under the Termination Act, "tribal property" consisted of "any real or personal property, including water rights, or any interest in real or personal property, that belonged to the tribe and either was held by the United States in trust for the tribe or was subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States." 25 U.S.C. § 564a(d) (emphasis added). "Tribal property" included the right to bring tribal claims against the United States after termination. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 564e(c) (preserving right of all final enrollees to share in proceeds of “tribal claims” against United States); 564t (preserving tribal rights under Indian Claims Commission Act). The inclusion of water rights in Act’s provisions that “tribal claims” included claims arising under the 1864 Klamath Treaty.

B. The Klamath Distribution Act Affirms Final Enrollees’ Right To Bring Tribal Claims After Termination.

Congress enacted the Distribution Act in 1965 to better implement the final enrollees’ substantive right to bring tribal claims. 25 U.S.C. § 565 et seq. In addition to providing for the distribution of judgment awards (25 U.S.C. §§ 565a-c) and for withholding therefrom monies to be added to the litigation fund to pursue future claims (25 U.S.C. §§ 565, 565c), the Distribution Act authorized and directed the Secretary of the Interior to distribute “all other funds heretofore or hereafter deposited to the credit of the Klamath Tribe.” 25 U.S.C. § 565.

Confirming the personal, heritable nature of the final enrollees’ rights in tribal property, the Distribution Act established specific procedures for distributing judgment awards to the final enrollees as well as to the heirs and legatees of deceased final enrollees. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 565a, 565b (procedures for distributions of Dkt. 100 judgment to final enrollees and to heirs and legatees of deceased final enrollees); 565c (distribution of funds from other judgments). Under the Act, the Secretary alone shall have responsibility for effecting any distribution to the final enrollees, their heirs or legatees. See, e.g., 25 U.S.C. 565b (directing the Secretary to mail any notices of the distributions to all known heirs or legatees of deceased Final Enrollees).

More important, the Distribution Act made unequivocal that any monies held by the United States Treasury to the credit of the Klamath Tribes were held for the final enrollees, including, beyond judgment funds, “payments for rights-of-way, trespass damages, or other revenues, together with any interest accrued thereon.” 25 U.S.C. § 565c. This confirms that the personal interests of the final enrollees in tribal property included all monies held or received to the credit of the Klamath Tribe after termination and beyond awards from tribal claims. Based on their personal property interest, it goes without saying only the final enrollees could have a vested, inalienable right to bring claims for any harms to such accounts. It also confirms that the litigation fund established in 1961 and the object of Plaintiff’s proposed amended claims, was vested property held by the Federal Government for the benefit of final enrollees.

C. The Klamath Restoration Act Preserved The Rights Of The Final Enrollees.

Thirty-two years after termination, Congress restored federal recognition to the tribe and its members with the Klamath Restoration Act. Congress was aware in doing so that the Termination Act created interests in tribal property in the final enrollees, which included the right to bring tribal claims after termination.

Goodyear Atomic Corp. v. Miller, 486 U.S. 174, 184-85, 108 S.Ct. 1704, 1712 (1988) (“We generally presume that Congress is knowledgeable about existing law pertinent to the legislation it enacts”). See 25 U.S.C. §§ 564e(c); 565 et seq. The language of the Restoration Act shows that Congress meant to preserve them.

The Restoration Act did not completely repeal the Termination Act, though Congress knew how to do so had it chosen to do so.¹² Congress instead intended the provisions of the Restoration Act to “co-exist” with the Termination Act in order to protect the existing property rights of the final enrollees. Wolfchild v. U.S., 96 Fed. Cl. 302, 314-15 (Fed. Cl. 2010).

The Restoration Act did three things with respect to the rights of the restored Tribe:

(1) It made applicable to the restored Tribe and its members “all laws and regulations of the United States of general application to Indians or nations, tribes, or bands of Indians” that were not “inconsistent with any specific provision” of the Restoration Act, “[e]xcept as otherwise provided” by the Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(a).

(2) It restored to the Tribe those rights and privileges arising under “any “Federal treaty, Executive order, agreement, or statute, or any other Federal authority” that had been “diminished or lost” under the Termination Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(b).

(3) It rendered certain provisions of the Termination Act inapplicable to the restored Tribe and its members after August 27, 1986 “to the extent that they are inconsistent” with the Restoration Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(b).

Reading the Termination and Restoration Acts together, as the court must, makes clear that Congress intended the rights-granting provisions of the Termination Act to survive restoration. Wolfchild v. U.S., 96 Fed. Cl. 302, 315 (Fed. Cl. 2010) (where two statutes are capable of co-existence, it is the duty of the courts, absent a clearly expressed congressional intention to the contrary, to regard each as effective) citing Cathedral Candle Co. v. U.S. Int’l. Trade Commission, 400 F.3d 1352, 1365 (Fed. Cir. 2005). Here, Congress made plain that it intended the provisions of the Termination Act that were not inconsistent with the Restoration Act to survive.

Congress wanted the personal property rights of the final enrollees that were created the by Termination Act to be preserved after restoration. This is evident in section 566(d) of the Restoration Act, which provides that nothing in the Act's provisions "shall alter any property right or obligation, any contractual right or obligation, or any obligation for taxes already levied." 25 U.S.C. § 566(d) ("Certain rights not altered"). The House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, in its report accompanying H.R. 3554, understood this language as not altering "rights and obligations already incurred." H. Rpt. 99-630 (Jun. 11, 1986), at 3.

Under the Termination Act, the right of the final enrollees to bring tribal claims was a "personal property" right. See 25 U.S.C. § 564c. The rights preserved by section 566(d) of the Restoration Act therefore included the right to bring tribal claims against the United States. See 25 U.S.C. § 564e(c) (preserving interests of all final enrollees in future tribal claims); § 565 (providing for continued maintenance and use of litigation trust fund for final enrollees); § 565c (providing for distributions from litigation and judgment trust funds to final enrollees whose names appear on the final roll or their heirs and legatees).

The Restoration Act did, however, limit the scope of the final enrollees' right to bring tribal claims under the Termination and Distribution Acts. By restoring rights under the 1864 Treaty to the restored Tribe, 25 U.S.C. § 566(b), the Restoration Act precludes the final enrollees' ability to bring claims after August 27, 1986, since doing so would be inconsistent with the terms of the Restoration Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(b).

It is therefore entirely consistent for the final enrollees to continue to bring such claims for harms arising before the Tribe's federal rights, including its rights under treaty, were restored. Indeed, it only makes sense. First, because there was no tribal entity capable of possessing federal rights during the termination era, and only the final enrollees could exercise the tribe's treaty rights in that time.

Second, to interpret the Restoration Act as bestowing a retroactive right the restored Tribe to bring tribal claims for the period in which it was not federally recognized would be inconsistent with the terms of the Restoration Act. Section 566(d) of the Act preserved the property interests of the final enrollees.

The only way for the surviving parts of the Termination Act to remain effective alongside the Restoration Act, Wolfchild v. U.S., 96 Fed. Cl. 302, 315 (Fed. Cl. 2010), is to preserve the right of the final enrollees to bring tribal claims against the United States as to harms occurring before the Tribe's restoration of federal recognition on August 27, 1986, and to terminate that right for harms arising after that date, which remain the exclusive and sovereign prerogative of the restored Tribe.

The fact that a final enrollee is or is not an enrolled member of the restored Tribe is irrelevant for the analysis. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212 (finding that record suggests overlapping membership). The fact that a final enrollee may enroll in the restored Tribe cannot, without more, confer upon the Tribe an interest in the final enrollee's personal property rights any more than membership in the Automobile Association of America gives AAA an interest in the title to one's car. The statutory rights of the final enrollees arise from Congressional enactments that are not within the Tribe's power to change.

Congress understood that it was preserving the property interests of persons who might or might not enroll as members in the restored Tribe. The restored Tribe wanted to make clear that it understood this, too. Congress incorporated the Klamath Constitution into the Restoration Act by reference. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 564r; 566g(2), (5), (6). The Act defines tribal "member" as those persons eligible for enrollment in the restored Tribe under its constitution and bylaws. 25 U.S.C. § 566g. Article III of the Klamath Constitution provides that final enrollees are "automatically" enrolled as members. A605. It also provides that persons born after the closing of the terminated tribe's final roll in 1954 can enroll in the restored Tribe when they meet certain eligibility requirements and are approved by an enrollment committee. A605. The Klamath Constitution shows that enrollment does not affect the rights of the final enrollees under the Termination and Distribution Acts. It states that the enrollment of persons born after August 13, 1954 would be for "Tribal purposes only" and would not "affect their eligibility for funds from any types of disbursements related to the Klamath Termination Act or claims litigation.” A605.

D. Plaintiff’s Proposed Claims Concern Personal Property Belonging To The Final Enrollees, Not Terminated Or Restored Tribal Property.

The CFC denied Plaintiff’s request to amend its complaint to add claims relating to the litigation fund established by the final enrollees in 1961 and held by the Secretary of the Interior for their use ever since. The CFC offered no explanation for its denial, beyond stating the proposed claims were “moot.” (See Section V below). The CFC’s denial implicitly relied on a conclusion that the restored Tribe had a legally protectable interest in the litigation fund (which is certainly how Defendant sees it. See A773-774 (describing Department of the Interior’s treatment of the litigation fund as a restored Tribal account). The CFC’s conclusion is cannot be correct since would directly contradict the terms of the Termination Act.

The Termination Act had bilateral effects on the respective authorities of the tribe and the federal government. The Termination Act did anticipate the end of the terminated tribe’s social or historical existence as an Indian community. It specifically preserved the tribe’s right to take any action under its constitution or bylaws to the extent such action was consistent with the Termination Act. 25 U.S.C. § 564r. The final enrollees did so, establishing the Committee and authorizing the Secretary to take the litigation funds in trust pursuant to their old constitution. See, e.g., A809-810. As a corollary, however, the Act also “terminated” the authority of the Secretary or other officer of the United States “to take, review, or approve any action under the constitution and bylaws of the tribe.” 25 U.S.C. § 564r.

Two conclusions follow from section 564r’s reciprocal provisions. If the final enrollees formed the Claims Committee and established the litigation fund pursuant to the old tribal constitution, and if the Secretary was barred from taking, reviewing, or approving any action under the tribal constitution, then the Secretary can only have accepted the litigation fund on behalf of the final enrollees. This only makes sense, since the litigation fund was established from tribal funds the interests in which had already transferred to the final enrollees with publication of the final roll in 1957. What the Secretary took on behalf of the final enrollees already belonged to the final enrollees. Any doubts should be resolved by the Distribution Act, which makes clear that any funds held in the U.S. Treasury to the credit of the Klamath Tribes were to be held for the benefit of the final enrollees or their heirs or legatees. 25 U.S.C. § 565. The fact that Defendant may have treated the litigation fund over the years as if it were a restored Tribal asset goes only to the question of Defendant’s liability, not the final enrollees’ beneficial interests in the fund.

Regardless whether the final enrollees believed themselves to be a tribe, under federal law the Secretary and other officers of the United States could only treat with them as final enrollees, and not as the tribe itself. 25 U.S.C. § 564r. If the Termination Act did not end the historical existence of the Klamath Indian community, it ended the ability of Federal officials from according them rights under federal law as an Indian community. Any other result would render the Termination Act ineffective, the Restoration Act unnecessary, and leave the rights conferred by the Distribution Act vague and unclear. Because the litigation fund was established by the final enrollees from tribal assets in which their personal interests had vested, and because the Secretary was barred from accepting the fund from a Klamath tribe, the Secretary must have done so on behalf of the final enrollees as the final enrollees. Since the Restoration Act preserved the final enrollees' property interests in the fund, 25 U.S.C. 566the restored Tribe can have no legal interest therein.

III. COMPLETE RELIEF CAN BE ACCORDED THE PARTIES UNDER RCFC 19(a)(1)(A).

RCFC 19(a)(1)(A) is the counterpart of Fed. R. Civ. Proc. (“FRCP”) 19(a)(1)(A). FRCP 19(a)(1)(A) is designed to protect the interests of those who are already parties to an action by requiring the presence of all persons who have an interest in the litigation so that any relief that may be awarded will effectively and completely adjudicate the dispute. Wright & Miller, 7 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. (3d ed.) § 1604. RCFC 19(a) provides that a party should be joined if, “in that person’s absence, the court cannot accord complete relief among existing parties.” RCFC 19(a)(1)(A). The joinder under this provision is closely related to the factors listed in the indispensability analysis under 19(b). Wright & Miller, 7 Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. (3d ed.) § 1604.

In its February 11, 2011 opinion, the Court of Federal Claims determined that under RCFC 19(a)(1)(A),¹³ complete relief could not be afforded the existing parties in the absence of the restored Tribe. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212. The CFC’s decision relied on the same findings supporting its determination that the Tribe had a legally protectable interest under RCFC 19(a)(1)(B): that membership and interests of the restored Tribe and the final enrollees overlapped; that Plaintiff sought to vindicate treaty rights belonging to the restored Tribe; and that the restored Tribe had no control over Plaintiff’s action.

¹³ See supra n. 6

Based on this, the CFC concluded that in the absence of the restored Tribe, it would be unable to afford complete relief as between the Plaintiff and the Defendant. Klamath I, 97 Fed. Cl. at 212. That determination relies implicitly on a determination of the nature and scope of the final enrollees' statutory rights, a legal conclusion that this Court reviews de novo.

For the reasons set forth in Section II of the Argument above, no one other than the final enrollees can claim a legally protectable interest in the statutory rights Plaintiff here seeks to vindicate in its surviving and proposed claims. Those rights include the exclusive right to bring tribal claims for harms originating before August 27, 1986, but not claims for harms arising thereafter.

The existing and proposed statutory claims of the final enrollees are exclusive and necessarily distinct from the rights of the restored Tribe. As a result, there should be no reason that complete relief cannot be accorded as between Plaintiff and the Defendant. A judgment in this action would fully and finally determine the rights of the parties. It cannot expose the Defendant to multiple liability since no one other than the final enrollees can raise tribal claims for harms arising before August 27, 1986, or for harms to trust assets in which the final enrollees have an exclusive vested interest. The Restoration Act's restoration of rights of rights under the 1864 Treaty place a temporally defined limit on the scope of the final enrollees' and the Tribe's respective rights. As a result, though Defendant could ultimately be found liable to the final enrollees and the restored Tribe, it could not be liable for the same claims, since the rights of each arise from different federal authority. Moreover, because the personal interests of the final enrollees in their property rights are inherently different from the sovereign interests of the restored Tribe, the scope of possible prejudice from a negative decision seems unlikely if not nonexistent. A judgment in the action could only be binding on Defendant as to the limited scope of the personal rights of the final enrollees, a limited scope that is, by operation of law, necessarily exclusive of the cognizable interests of the restored Tribal sovereign.

IV. THE TRIBE IS NOT AN INDISPENSABLE PARTY UNDER RCFC 19(B) WITHOUT WHOM THE ACTION CANNOT PROCEED.

A. The Court's RCFC 19(b) Decision

In Klamath II, the CFC began its analysis by correctly noting that Plaintiff, on behalf of the final enrollees, would have no adequate remedy if the complaint was dismissed. Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 at *7. Nevertheless it dismissed Plaintiff's existing and proposed amended claims after determining that a majority of the RCFC 19(b) factors weighed heavily in favor of that result.

The court relied on several countervailing considerations, foremost among which was the restored Tribe's "compelling claim of sovereign immunity." Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 at *8, citing Pimentel, 553 U.S. 851 at 869. Relying on its prior determination that the restored Tribe had asserted a legally protectable interest in Plaintiff's claims, the court found that such interest could be impaired by an adverse ruling. Even without direct preclusive effect, an adverse ruling would be negative precedent that would confront the Tribe in future litigation based on the 1864 Treaty and associated statutes. Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 at *8. That negative precedent could ripen into binding adverse precedent if it were later affirmed by the Federal Circuit. As a practical matter, the court concluded, proceeding without the restored Tribe would impair or impede the Tribe's ability to protect its sovereign interests. Id. at *8.

Also important in the court's analysis was its determination that any disposition of Plaintiff's claims in the absence of the restored Tribe could leave the Defendant subject to multiple and conflicting claims with respect to the rights at issue. Id. at *8-9. Because the United States would vigorously defend against such claims regardless who brought them, if Defendant prevailed here it would have "obvious implications" for the restored Tribe. Id. at *9. The court found no way to lessen or avoid prejudice in the event Plaintiff's suit proceeded. Id. at *9.

Because the restored Tribe can assert no legally protectable interest in Plaintiff's claims, disposing of Plaintiff's action in the Tribe's absence cannot, as a practical matter, impair or impede the Tribe's ability to protect whatever federal interests it may choose to prosecute in future. For the same reason, proceeding with the action cannot, as a logical matter, leave the Defendant at risk of incurring multiple or inconsistent obligations with respect to the Tribe's interests.

B. The Restoration Act Limited The Restored Tribe's Sovereignty.

Tribal sovereign immunity is a factor that must be weighed in the RCFC 19(b) analysis when present. In that event, tribal sovereign immunity should indeed be afforded "heightened protection" when a lawsuit poses a potential injury to a tribe's sovereign's interests. Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 at *7, citing Odyssey Marine Exploration, Inc. v. Unidentified Shipwrecked Vessel, 657 F.3d 1159, 1181 (11th Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 132 S.Ct. 2379 (2012). See also Davis v. United States, 192 F.3d 951, 960 (10th Cir. 1999) (strong policy favors dismissal when tribe cannot be joined for sovereign immunity). The Court of Federal Claims cited at length from the U.S. Supreme Court's recent decision in Pimentel, which involved a dismissal under FRCP 19(b) for failure to join a foreign sovereign.

As the CFC correctly noted, Pimentel is distinguishable, not least because it involved the doctrine of foreign sovereign immunity and the comity and dignity interests arising thereunder. Klamath II, 2012 WL 2878551 at *8 and n.16. Though codified in federal law, the source of foreign sovereign immunity is international law. Intel Corp. v. Commonwealth Scientific & Indus. Research Organization, 455 F.3d 1364, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2006) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 94-1487, at 7 (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6604, 6605 (Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976 codified existing international law); cf. Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma v. Mfg. Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751, 756, 118 S. Ct. 1700, 1703, 140 L. Ed. 2d 981 (1998) (foreign sovereign immunity began as judicial doctrine).

The doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity arose under federal law “almost by accident.” Id. Because of the “peculiar” quasi-sovereign status of Indian tribes, tribal immunity is not congruent with that which the Federal Government or the States enjoy. Three Affiliated Tribes of Fort Berthold Reservation v. Wold Engineering, 476 U.S. 877, 890 (1986). Tribal immunity from suit is a matter of federal common law, not a constitutional guarantee, and its scope is subject to control and modification by Congress in the exercise of its plenary authority over tribes. Crowe and Dunlevy, P.C. v. Stidham, 640 F.3d 1140, 1154 (10th Cir. 2011); see also Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. Babbitt, 117 F.3d 1489, 1498 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (Congress has plenary authority under federal Constitution to limit, modify, or eliminate tribal sovereignty) (citing Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 58, 98 S.Ct. 1670, 1676–77).

If the restored Tribe has any legally protectable interest in Plaintiff's claims – which it does not – then the RCFC 19(b) analysis requires the court to balance the interests of two differently weighted sovereigns: the restored Tribe claiming an interest in Plaintiff's claims, and the United States Congress, which created and preserved the statutory rights of final enrollees.

Tribal immunity exists at the sufferance of Congress, whose plenary power over Indian Affairs reflects the hierarchy of their respective authorities. In dismissing Plaintiff's claims because of the restored Tribe's indispensability as a sovereign, the Court of Federal Claims turned this hierarchy on its head.

Congress has an interest in seeing its laws enforced, just as it has an interest in exercising its plenary authority over Indian affairs. In an exercise of this authority, Congress in 1961 terminated the Klamath Tribes and conferred statutory rights in its tribal property, including the right to bring tribal treaty claims against the United States, upon final enrollees. In a later exercise of that same authority, Congress in 1986 restored federal rights to the Tribe as such and preserved the statutory rights earlier conferred upon the final enrollees. In doing so, Congress also placed limits on the sovereignty of the restored Tribe. The Restoration Act rendered applicable to the restored Tribe and its members any provisions of the Termination Act that were consistent with its terms. The Restoration Act preserved existing property rights of the final enrollees, including the right to bring claims for money damages against the United States on behalf of the terminated tribe. Plaintiff's action is such a claim seeking to enforce precisely these rights in a forum created to hear money damages claims against the United States.

Under these circumstances, by dismissing the Plaintiff's claims because of the Tribe's immunity, the Court of Federal Claims ignored the sovereign interests of Congress in seeing its laws enforced and in so doing allowed the limited sovereignty of the restored Tribe to outweigh the broader national sovereignty of Congress.

By not fully repealing the Termination Act and by preserving the statutory rights of the final enrollees after restoration, Congress restricted the sovereignty of the restored Tribe, limiting the period for which the Tribe could bring treaty claims in a manner consistent with the statutory rights it maintained in the final enrollees. United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 202, 124 S. Ct. 1628, 1634, 158 L. Ed. 2d 420 (2004) (federal Constitution's "plenary" grants of power authorize Congress to enact legislation that both restricts and, in turn, relaxes restrictions on tribal sovereign authority).

V. THE COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS ABUSED ITS DISCRETION IN DENYING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO AMEND THE COMPLAINT AS "MOOT" WITHOUT CONSIDERING THE PROPOSED AMENDED CLAIMS.

A party may amend its pleading by leave of the court and the court "should freely give leave when justice so requires." RCFC 15(a)(2). Where the underlying facts or circumstances relied upon by a plaintiff in such a motion are a proper subject of relief, the plaintiff "ought to be afforded an opportunity to test his claim on the merits." Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962). RCFC 15(a)'s liberal policy of granting amendments is based in part on the belief that decisions on the merits should be made whenever possible. Holland v. United States, 62 Fed. Cl. 395, 406 (2004).

The decision to grant leave to amend a complaint is left to the discretion of the trial court. Such discretion is limited by RCFC 15(a)'s direction that leave be freely given, which "evinces a bias in favor of granting leave to amend." Dussouy v. Gulf Coast Inv. Corp., 660 F.2d 594, 597 (5th Cir. 1981) (FRCP 15(a) severely restricts judge's freedom to deny motion to amend). Unless there is a substantial reason to deny leave to amend, the discretion of the district court is not broad enough to permit denial. Id. at 598. Reasons warranting denial include "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failures to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, futility of amendment, etc.” Holland v. United States, 62 Fed. Cl. 395, 406 (2004), citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962). While the absence of an explanation for the denial of a motion for leave to amend a complaint need not always result in reversal, the reasons for the denial must be readily apparent from the decision, particularly in view of the liberal position of the federal rules on granting amendments. Dussouy v. Gulf Coast Inv. Corp., 660 F.2d 594, 597 (5th Cir. 1981) (citations omitted).

The CFC’s denial of Plaintiff’s motion to amend was contained in a nineteen-word footnote tacked to the end of its dismissal under RCFC 19(b). The footnote simply read: “Because of this ruling, the court will deny, as moot, a motion filed by plaintiff to amend its complaint.” Klamath II, n. 22.

The denial was not based on Plaintiff’s undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive, but because Plaintiff’s motion was moot. The only reason for deeming Plaintiff’s motion “moot” was the court’s dismissal of the action for want of an indispensable party. In concluding that the Tribe was indispensable as to the proposed claims, the court necessarily determined that the restored Tribe claimed a legally protectable interest in the litigation fund. In doing so the court abused its discretion inasmuch as that conclusion is based on errors of fact and of law.

Plaintiff amended its complaint as a matter of course on March 17, 2009. A50. On April 24, 2012, Plaintiff moved under RCFC 15(a) to amend its complaint to assert claims for takings and for trust fund mismanagement related to Defendant's handling of the litigation fund. A630.

Plaintiff's proposed amended complaint included allegations that (1) in 1961 the final enrollees established a $350,000 fund for the purpose of paying the cost of litigating post-termination claims against the United States; (2) the Secretary of the Interior agreed to hold the litigation fund in trust for the benefit of the final enrollees and had done so ever since; (3) in the ensuing years, the Secretary and the Committee have worked together to distribute monies from the fund to final enrollees or their heirs and legatees; (4) since the start of the action, federal officials and the restored Tribe separately and affirmatively asserted that the restored Tribe lacked an interest in the fund because it belonged to the final enrollees exclusively; (5) as of January 2012, the Defendant reversed its position and denied Plaintiff access to the fund to pay the costs of its litigation; (6) after January 2012, Defendant for the first time asserted that the litigation fund was the property of the Tribe in which the final enrollees lacked any interest; and (7) the facts giving rise to the amended claims came to light since the start in 2009 of Plaintiff's action.

In opposing Plaintiff's motion, Defendant claimed that the litigation fund was property of the restored Tribe and formed the subject of the restored Tribe's own trust mismanagement claims pending before the federal District Court for the

At no time in this action has the restored Tribe ever claimed an interest in the litigation fund, whether legally protectable or otherwise. In fact, Plaintiff included exhibits to its proposed amended complaints demonstrating that Tribal officials disclaimed any Tribal interest in the fund. See A728. As with Plaintiff's original claims, it was Defendant that asserted such a interest on the restored Tribe's behalf. A781. ("The Litigation Expense Fund is a Tribal Asset"). But Defendant's assertion of a Tribal interest in the subject of Plaintiff's proposed amended claim cannot be sufficient for purposes of RCFC 19(a). At best it is simply a defense to Plaintiff's proposed claims, not a claim by the Tribe of a legally protectable interest in the fund. Had the Tribe wanted to claim an interest in the fund, it could have done so. The Tribe applied for and was granted amicus status the year before. For this reason alone, the CFC's denial of the motion to amend must be reversed.

As explained above, the litigation fund was established to pay the costs of pursuing tribal claims against the United States after termination. The final ¹⁴ Presented with this information, Plaintiff on June 4, 2012 moved to intervene in the Nez Perce action to protect any interests of the final enrollees that might have be the subject of that action and to preserve all information and records related to the management and disposition thereof. That motion remains under consideration today.

enrollees' rights in the fund were unequivocally established in 1965 when Congress enacted the Distribution Act. 25 U.S.C. § 565 et seq. That Act directs the Secretary to manage the funds for the benefit of the final enrollees (and their heirs and legatees), and to use it to pay for the costs of future claims. It established procedures by which amounts could be distributed to final enrollees or to the heirs and legatees of deceased final enrollees. As trust property of the final enrollees, its status as property belonging to the final enrollees was preserved by the Restoration Act. 25 U.S.C. § 566(d).

A. The Denial Is Contrary To The Spirit And Policy Of RCFC 15(a).

Plaintiff's proposed amended complaint, together with the materials Defendant itself entered into the record in opposition thereto, raised a question of material fact respecting the identity and ownership of the accounts in which Defendant held the monies comprising the litigation fund.

The exhibits submitted with Defendant's opposing papers showed that there was a question as to the identity of the relevant trust account(s) claimed by the Tribe. At the very least, those exhibits demonstrated that the Secretary had, over time, deposited the litigation fund into different trust accounts having different account numbers (A808); and that the trust account numbers originally assigned to the litigation fund accounts did not match the numbers of what Defendant asserted was the current litigation fund account. A795.

By denying the motion to amend, the Court of Federal Claims thereby thwarted one of the primary federal policy goals in permitting liberal amendment under Rule 15, which is precisely to facilitate determination of claims on the merits. Dussouy v. Gulf Coast Inv. Corp., 660 F.2d 594, 598 (5th Cir. 1981). Because it was necessarily based on a predicate determination that the restored Tribe claimed a legally protectable interest in the litigation fund, the subject of the proposed amended claims, the Court of Federal Claims' denial presumed the very fact that the parties' own exhibits had materially called into issue: the identity and ownership of the accounts holding the litigation funds. For this reason alone the court's denial should be reversed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the judgments of the Court of Federal Claims should be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings.

Respectfully submitted;

ALLEGRA, Judge:

The Klamath Tribe Claims Committee (Klamath Claims Committee or plaintiff) seeks damages owing to alleged takings and breaches of fiduciary duty by the Department of the Interior (Interior). It asserts that Interior has failed to disburse funds owed to tribal members and to safeguard treaty-based water rights associated with a dam. Defendant has moved to dismiss plaintiff's complaint, claiming, pursuant to RCFC 12\(b\)\(1\), that this court lacks jurisdiction, or, alternatively, pursuant to RCFC 12\(b\)\(6\), that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons that follow, the court, GRANTS, IN PART, this motion and dismisses two of plaintiff's counts for lack of jurisdiction. As to the remaining counts, this court concludes, under RCFC 19, that a necessary party must be joined.

A brief recitation of the facts provides *205 necessary context.¹

The United States and the Klamath Tribes (the Tribes) entered into a Treaty in 1864. See Treaty between the United States and the Klamath and Moadoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, October 14, 1864, 16 Stat. 707 (the Treaty). Under this Treaty, the Tribes ceded their interest in approximately twelve million acres of land. The Tribes reserved to themselves a reservation of approximately 800,000 acres, along with “the exclusive right of taking fish in the streams and lakes, included in said reservation, and of gathering edible roots, seeds, and berries within its limits.” Id. In exchange, the federal government gave the Tribes cash and goods worth approximately $300,000. It also committed to provide various services to the Tribes and to hold tribal assets in trust for the benefit of the Tribes and its members. Id. From 1890 to 1920, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) surveyed the reservation for its irrigation potential and constructed irrigation facilities. One such facility was a diversion dam, the Chiloquin Dam (the Dam), which diverted portions of the Sprague River into canals that served lands on the Williamson River and Upper Klamath Lake.

In 1954, Congress passed the Klamath Termination Act (the 1954 Act), Pub.L. No. 83–587, 68 Stat. 718 (codified, as amended, at 25 U.S.C. §§ 564–564x), which ended federal supervision over the Tribes' trust assets and tribal properties, and terminated the federal services furnished to the Tribes. As described by the Court of Claims in an earlier case—

[t]he basic scheme of that statute ... was to give each adult member whose name appeared on the final tribal roll an election between withdrawing from the tribe and having his interest in tribal property commuted to money to be paid to him, and, on the other hand, remaining in the tribe and participating in a nongovernmental tribal management plan.

Klamath & Modoc Tribes v. United States, 436 F.2d 1008, 1010–11 (Ct.Cl.1971).² Section 10 of the 1954 Act authorized the government to dispose of federally-owned property acquired for administration of the Tribes or to transfer this property to qualifying entities. 1954 Act § 10 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564 i). Other provisions in this statute dealt with the federally-owned and operated irrigation facilities on the Klamath Reservation, which included the Dam. For example, section 13(a) of the 1954 Act authorized the Secretary to transfer the “care, operation and maintenance” of irrigation works to water users associations or irrigation districts. 1954 Act § 13(a) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564 l (a)).

Section 13(c) of the 1954 Act “authorized to be appropriated” $89,212 for “payment to the Klamath Tribe[s]” at four percent interest “per annum,” calculated from the date of disbursement. 1954 Act § 13(c) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564 l (c)). The 1954 Act stated that these funds were “reimbursement for tribal funds used for irrigation construction operation and maintenance benefitting nontribal lands on the Klamath Reservation.” Id. It further directed the Secretary to transfer all personal property or funds that the United States held in trust, free of encumbrance, to tribal members within four years. 1954 Act § 8 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564g). The Secretary was directed to arrange for the disposition of the Tribes' property within this same time period, with all tasks to be completed at the earliest practicable time, but not later than August 13, 1958. 1954 Act § 6(b) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564e(b)); see also Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011. Once all restrictions *206 on the Tribes' property were removed, the Secretary was to publish a proclamation in the Federal Register that the trust relationship between the Tribes and the United States was terminated. 1954 Act § 18 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564q). Finally, the 1954 Act expressly preserved the Tribes' water and fishing rights as granted under the 1864 Treaty. 1954 Act § 14 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564m).

Following the passage of this legislation, approximately seventy-eight percent of the Tribes' members (1,660 of 2,133) chose to withdraw, and defendant used its authority under Section 10 of the Act to sell off much of the Tribes' property to pay out these withdrawing members. See Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011. The Secretary transferred the remaining tribal property to a private trustee to be maintained for those members who chose to remain with the Tribes. In 1955, about a year after the passage of the 1954 Act, Congress appropriated funds to reimburse the Tribes for money used to construct, operate and maintain irrigation facilities benefiting non-tribal lands. See Dept. of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1956, Pub.L.

No. 84–78, ch. 147, 69 Stat. 141, 143 (June 16, 1955).³ In 1961, the Secretary published a notice in the Federal Registrar stating that the federal government's relationship with the Tribe was officially terminated. 26 Fed.Reg. 7,362 (Aug. 12, 1961).

On August 21, 1961, the Tribes' governing body passed a resolution giving the Klamath Claims Committee authority to pursue certain claims against the United States. See Joint Resolution of Tribal Councils March 2008 (describing the earlier resolution). More specifically, the Klamath Claims Committee represents all 2,133 individuals who appeared on the rolls of the Tribes as of the date of their termination under the 1954 Act—both those who withdrew and those who chose to remain. In 1961, the Tribes and several individuals (both withdrawing and remaining members for themselves and as representatives for similarly-situated individuals) filed suit against the United States in the U.S. Court of Claims alleging that the United States effectuated a taking in implementing the Termination Act. Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1012. In 1962, seventy-three withdrawn members filed a similar suit. Id. at 1013. The Court of Claims consolidated the two cases in 1964. Id. at 1010. It later dismissed some of the claims, allowed others to proceed, and remanded the case back to the trial commissioner for further proceedings. Id. at 1022. The takings claims were eventually settled for $23 million. See Klamath & Modoc Tribes v. United States, 199 Ct.Cl. 1024, 1972 WL 12758 (Ct.Cl. Sept. 18, 1972), Order at 2–3. The settlement was effectuated, in part, by legislation passed by Congress in 1965.⁴

Although the government-to-government relationship between the Tribes and the United States ceased in 1961, BIA took several years to conclude operations and transfer the Dam and other irrigation project facilities. In 1973, Interior transferred title to the Dam to the Modoc Point Irrigation District (MPID), a non-federal entity chartered under Oregon law, made up of landowners. MPID accepted the transfer in 1974. See Operation and Maintenance Charges, Deletion of Needless Regulations, 44 Fed.Reg. 12,192 (Mar. 6, 1979). In 1979, BIA published a notice deleting all the regulations pertaining to the irrigation system in light of the 1973 transfer of ownership to the MPID. Id. Nevertheless, several court decisions *207 at or around this time confirmed that the Tribes' rights to certain natural resources under the 1864 Treaty survived the passage of the Termination Act. See Kimball v. Callahan, 493 F.2d 564 (9th Cir.1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1019, 95 S.Ct. 491, 42 L.Ed.2d 292 (1974) (treaty-reserved hunting and fishing rights on former reservation lands survived termination); United States v. Adair, 723 F.2d 1394 (9th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1252, 104 S.Ct. 3536, 82 L.Ed.2d 841 (1984) (same as to implied reserved water rights).

In 1986, Congress passed the Klamath Indian Tribe Restoration Act (the Restoration Act), Pub.L. No. 99–398, 100 Stat. 849 (Aug. 27, 1986) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 566), reestablishing federal recognition of the Tribes. While the Restoration Act restored the Tribes' federal services, as well as the government-to-government relationship between the Tribe and the United States, it did not alter existing property rights. See 25 U.S.C. § 566(d). According to certain tribal documents, the United States' recognition of the Tribes did not change the responsibilities of the Klamath Claims Committee. See Klamath Tribe Executive Resolution, July 1993.

Throughout the post-termination and subsequent restoration period, the Klamath Claims Committee believed that it had broad authority to represent the Tribe and its members in tribal litigation. Several resolutions of the Committee reflect this. Among these is a 1983 resolution that states that the Tribes' August 21, 1961, grant of authority designated the Klamath Claims Committee as “the post-termination representative body of the Tribe” with respect to the “supervision and management of tribal claims against the United States for all dealings.” Klamath Claims Committee Resolution, January 1983; see also Klamath Claims Committee Resolutions, June 1996; Klamath Claims Committee Resolution, May 1996. In 1993, the Tribes authorized plaintiff to work with BIA to disburse judgments from cases in which plaintiff, acting on behalf of the 1954 membership, was successful. See Klamath Tribe Executive Resolution, July 1993. More recently, the governing body of the Tribes reaffirmed the Klamath Claims Committee's role in tribal litigation when it authorized the Committee to use funds to “pursue claims, including but not limited to claims now being prosecuted against PacifiCorp.” See Joint Resolution of Tribal Council, March 2008.⁵ This resolution, however, did not give the Claims Committee exclusive authority to pursue the Pacificorp litigation, as it envisioned that the Tribes would also participate in that litigation. Id. The same resolution indicated that, to the extent that the Claims Committee pursued “other claims” outside of the Pacificorp case, it must act “within [its] authority as established by the General Counsel.” *Id.*⁶

In the late 1980s, Interior determined that the Dam and its fish ladder were adversely affecting several fish species listed as “endangered” under the Endangered Species Act of 1973, 87 Stat. 884, 16 U.S.C. § 1531 et seq. In 2001, Congress authorized a study to assess alternatives for improving fish passage at the Dam. See Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002, Pub.L. No. 107–171, § 10905 116 Stat. 134, 537. After consulting with the MPID and the Tribes, Interior determined that removing the Dam was the best course of action. In 2006, BIA negotiated a cooperative agreement with MPID under which Interior would pay for removal of the Dam and construction of an alternative electric pump plant for irrigation. MPID landowners voted in favor of Dam removal, and signed a cooperative agreement *208 with the BIA. Removal was completed in August 2008.

Plaintiff filed its initial complaint with the court on February 6, 2009, and an amended complaint on March 17, 2009. The latter alleges four causes of action: (i) a taking of Indian trust assets based on the government's failure to reimburse the Tribes as authorized by section 13 of the Termination Act; (ii) a breach of fiduciary duty based on the failure to disburse the section 13 authorized funds; (iii) a taking based on the removal of the Chiloquin Dam and its associated water storage;⁷ and (iv) a breach of fiduciary duty based on the removal of the Dam and its associated water storage. Plaintiff asserts that this court possesses jurisdiction over these claims under the Indian Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1505. On May 7, 2009, defendant filed a motion to dismiss under RCFC 12(b)(1) and (6). On June 21, 2009, plaintiff filed its response to defendant's motion to dismiss and a cross-motion for summary judgment. Briefing and oral argument on these motions have now been completed.

II. DISCUSSION

[1] Deciding a motion to dismiss “starts with the complaint, which must be well-pleaded in that it must state the necessary elements of the plaintiff's claim, independent of any defense that may be interposed.” Holley v. United States, 124 F.3d 1462, 1465 (Fed.Cir.1997); see also Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955. The plaintiff must establish that the court has subject matter jurisdiction over its claims. Reynolds v. Army & Air Force Exch. Serv., 846 F.2d 746, 748 (Fed.Cir.1988); Hansen v. United States, 65 Fed.Cl. 76, 94 (2005). The court may look beyond the pleadings and “inquire into jurisdictional facts” to determine whether jurisdiction exists. Rocovich v. United States, 933 F.2d 991, 993 (Fed.Cir.1991). RCFC 12(d) provides that if “matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion must be treated as one for summary judgment.” But, this provision “does not apply to a motion under Rule 12(b)(1) to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter,” under which the court undoubtedly may “address matters outside the pleadings.” Reed Island–MLC, Inc. v. United States, 67 Fed.Cl. 27, 32 (2005) (citing Toxgon Corp. v. BNFL, Inc., 312 F.3d 1379, 1383 (Fed.Cir.2002)); see also Petro–Hunt, L.L.C. v. United States, 90 Fed.Cl. 51, 58 (2009).

To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under RCFC 12(b)(6), the complaint, in addition, must have sufficient “facial plausibility” to “allow [] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, — U.S. —, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009); see also Colida v. Nokia, Inc., 347 Fed.Appx. 568, 569–70 (Fed.Cir.2009). The plaintiff's factual allegations must “raise a right to relief above the speculative level” and cross “the line from conceivable to plausible.” Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 555, 127 S.Ct. 1955; see also Dobyns v. United States, 91 Fed.Cl. 412, 422–28 (2010) (examining this pleading standard). Nevertheless, the Federal Circuit has recently reiterated that “[i]n ruling on a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court must accept as true the complaint's undisputed factual allegations and should construe them in a light most favorable to the plaintiff.” Cambridge v. United States, 558 F.3d 1331, 1335 (Fed.Cir.2009); see also Bank of Guam v. United States, 578 F.3d 1318, 1326 (Fed.Cir.2009), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 130 S.Ct. 3468, 177 L.Ed.2d 1056 (2010); Petro–Hunt, L.L.C. v. United States, 90 Fed.Cl. 51, 68 (2009).

A. Statute of Limitations

The Tucker Act gives this court jurisdiction to award damages upon proof of “any claim against the United States founded either upon the Constitution, or any Act of Congress,” 28 U.S.C. § 1491(a). A companion statute, the Indian Tucker Act, confers a like waiver for Indian tribal claims that “otherwise *209 would be cognizable in the Court of Federal Claims if the claimant were not an Indian tribe.” 28 U.S.C. § 1505; see United States v. White Mountain Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. 465, 472–73, 123 S.Ct. 1126, 155 L.Ed.2d 40 (2003); United States v. Navajo Nation, 537 U.S. 488, 506, 123 S.Ct. 1079, 155 L.Ed.2d 60 (2003). This court has jurisdiction over this case under a combination of these provisions. See Klamath and Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1013.

[2] [3] A claimant must bring a claim under either of these provisions “within six years after such claim first accrues.” 28 U.S.C. § 2501; see also Samish Indian Nation v. United States, 419 F.3d 1355, 1369 (Fed.Cir.2005). This is a jurisdictional limit that cannot be waived. John R. Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States, 552 U.S. 130, 136, 128 S.Ct. 750, 169 L.Ed.2d 591 (2008). It is well-established that a claim accrues under section 2501 “when ‘all events have occurred to fix the Government’s alleged liability, entitling the claimant to demand payment and sue here for [its] money.’ ” Martinez v. United States, 333 F.3d 1295, 1303 (Fed.Cir.2003) (en banc), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1177, 124 S.Ct. 1404, 158 L.Ed.2d 76 (2004) (quoting Nager Elec. Co. v. United States, 368 F.2d 847, 851 (Ct.Cl.1966)); see also Samish, 419 F.3d at 1369. Because, as noted, this requirement is jurisdictional, plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that its claims were timely. See Alder Terrace, Inc. v. United States, 161 F.3d 1372, 1377 (Fed.Cir.1998); Entines v. United States, 39 Fed.Cl. 673, 678 (1997), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1117, 119 S.Ct. 1766, 143 L.Ed.2d 796 (1999); see also John R. Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States, 457 F.3d 1345, 1362 (Fed.Cir.2006) (Newman, J., dissenting); Reynolds, 846 F.2d at 748.⁸

[4] Two of plaintiff’s claims fall well outside the six-year window established by section 2501. The first of these involves its claim to disbursements required by section 13 of the 1954 Act—specifically, the $89,212, plus interest, plaintiff asserts it is still owed as reimbursement for the costs incurred by the Tribes in past construction, operation and maintenance of the Klamath Irrigation Project. Disbursement of these funds was originally to be completed not later than August 13, 1958. See 1954 Act, § 6(b), 68 Stat. 719 (1954), 25 U.S.C. § 564e(b); see also Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011. Congress later extended this deadline—first in 1957, to August 13, 1960, 71 Stat. 347 (1957), and then in 1958, to August 13, 1961, 72 Stat. 816 (1958). Any claims with respect to the disbursements thus accrued as of August 13, 1961, requiring that any lawsuit with respect thereto be brought within six years of that date.⁹ Indeed, as discussed above, it appears that several such suits were brought in the Court of Claims in 1961 and 1962. This suit, however, was not filed until 2009, long after the statute of limitations on any disbursement claim had run.

[5] Plaintiff’s claims relating to the transfer of the Chiloquin Dam fare no better. In these claims, plaintiff seeks the replacement cost of the Dam, plus interest. But, Interior transferred the Dam to the MPID in 1973—more than twenty-six years before this lawsuit was filed.¹⁰ Accordingly, any such claims also fall well outside the six-year statute of limitations established by 28 U.S.C. § 2501, and must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

*210 B. RCFC 19—Joinder of the Tribes

The remainder of plaintiff’s claims relate to the removal of the Dam in August of 2008. More specifically, plaintiff asserts that the removal of the Dam effectuated a taking of the Tribes’ associated water and fishing rights and constituted a breach of the fiduciary duties established by the 1864 Treaty and the 1954 Act. It would appear that this court has jurisdiction over these claims under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1491 and 1505, and that they are timely under 28 U.S.C. § 2501. Defendant, nonetheless, challenges these counts, asserting that they fail to state a claim under RCFC 12(b)(6). Defendant’s filings, however, beg another, more preliminary issue—whether, under RCFC 19, parties necessary to the resolution of this case must yet be joined herein.

“Compulsory joinder is an exception to the general practice of giving [a] plaintiff the right to decide who shall be the parties to a lawsuit.” 7 Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1602 (2001) (hereinafter “Federal Practice & Procedure”). Like its counterpart in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, RCFC 19(a)(1), entitled “Joinder of Persons Needed for Just Adjudication,” instructs—

A person who is subject to service of process and whose joinder will not deprive the court of subject-matter jurisdiction must be joined as a party if:

(A) in that person’s absence, the court cannot accord complete relief among existing parties; or

(B) that person claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and is so situated that disposing of the action in the person’s absence may:

- (i) as a practical matter impair or impede the person's ability to protect the interest; or
- (ii) leave an existing party subject to a substantial risk of incurring double, multiple, or otherwise inconsistent obligations because of the interest.

Cf. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a); see Republic of Philippines v. Pimentel, 553 U.S. 851, 862, 128 S.Ct. 2180, 171 L.Ed.2d 131 (2008) (noting that Rule 19(a) “states the principles that determine whether persons or entities must be joined in a suit”); 7 Federal Practice & Procedure § 1604. Where joinder is not feasible, the court “must determine whether, in equity and good conscience, the action should proceed....” The latter inquiry turns on a set of nonexclusive considerations mapped in RCFC 19(b).¹¹

The structure of this rule exhibits an analytical sequence in which the court must initially determine whether a person meets one of the criteria listed in RCFC 19(a)(1); if that is so, but joinder is not feasible, the court must determine whether, under RCFC 19(b), the case should proceed or be dismissed. The D.C. Circuit has distilled this analysis into three sequential questions: “Should the absentee be joined? If the absentee should be joined, can the absentee be joined? If the absentee cannot be joined should the lawsuit proceed without her nonetheless?” W. Md. Ry. Co. v. Harbor Ins. Co., 910 F.2d 960, 961 (D.C.Cir.1990); see also Glancy v. Taubman Ctrs., Inc., 373 F.3d 656, 666 (6th Cir.2004).¹² Through this process, *211 the rule “protect[s] the interests of absent persons as well as those already before the court from multiple litigation or inconsistent judicial determinations.” 7 Federal Practice & Procedure at § 1602; see also Shields v. Barrow, 58 U.S. (17 How.) 130, 139, 15 L.Ed. 158 (1854) (describing similar protections); John W. Reed, “Compulsory Joinder of Parties in Civil Actions,” 55 Mich. L.Rev. 327, 330 (1957).

The first joinder standard prescribed in RCFC 19(a)(1) protects existing parties by requiring the presence of all persons who have an interest in the litigation, so that any relief awarded will effectively and completely resolve the dispute. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 advisory committee's notes (1966); Gen. Refractories Co. v. First State Ins. Co., 500 F.3d 306, 315 (3d Cir.2007). This standard promotes judicial economy by “avoiding repeated lawsuits on the same essential subject matter.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 advisory committee's notes (1966); see also Gen. Refractories Co., 500 F.3d at 315; 7 Federal Practice & Procedure § 1604. A pertinent example of how this first alternative basis for compulsory joinder functions is Keweenaw Bay Indian Community v. Michigan, 11 F.3d 1341, 1346–47 (6th Cir.1993), which involved a dispute over fishing rights originating in a treaty. There, the court affirmed a lower court ruling which held that where one band of a tribe brought suit against the state and individual members of two other bands, the absent bands had to be joined so that any relief granted would not be partial. Id. at 1347. In this regard, the court noted that “the two absent bands are signatories to the very treaty at issue in the action,” adding that “[t]he likelihood that they would seek legal recourse in the event that the judgment deprived them of fishing rights to which they believe they are entitled can hardly be characterized as speculative.” Id.; see also Makah Indian Tribe v. Verity, 910 F.2d 555, 558–59 (9th Cir.1990) (absentee tribes that had treaty right in Columbia River salmon were necessary parties to action seeking higher ocean quota).

The second joinder standard prescribed in RCFC 19(a)(2) focuses more on the interests of those not before the court. It involves situations in which an absentee claims an interest in the subject matter of the action, and disposing of the case in that person's absence may prejudice either the parties before the court or the absentee. See United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians of Okla. v. United States, 480 F.3d 1318, 1324 (Fed.Cir.2007). While the “interest” referenced under this requirement may not be “indirect or contingent,” id. at 1325, this clause “does not require the absent party to actually possess an interest,” but merely requires that the absentee claim such an interest. Davis v. United States, 192 F.3d 951, 958 (10th Cir.1999); see also Shermoen v. United States, 982 F.2d 1312, 1318 (9th Cir.1992), cert. denied, 509 U.S. 903, 113 S.Ct. 2993, 125 L.Ed.2d 688 (1993) (holding that the rule covers such claimed interests unless “patently frivolous”). This clause “recognizes the importance of protecting the person whose joinder is in question against the practical prejudice to him which may arise through a disposition of the action in his absence.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 advisory committee's note (1966); see also Evergreen Park Nursing & Convalescent Home, Inc. v. Am. Equitable Assurance Co., 417 F.2d 1113, 1115 (7th Cir.1969); 7 Federal Practice & Procedure § 1604. It also recognizes “the need for considering whether a party may be left, after the adjudication, in a position where a person not joined can subject him to a double or otherwise inconsistent liability.” Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 advisory committee's note (1966); Willingham

v. Star Cutter Co., 555 F.2d 1340, 1346 (6th Cir.1977). A pertinent example of this second standard at work is Davis, 192 F.3d at 958–60. There, the Seminole Nation of Oklahoma claimed an interest in the subject matter of a suit brought by two bands of the Nation challenging their exclusion from a fund created by a judgment rendered by the Indian Claims Commission. Id. at 958–60. On the basis of this claimed *212 interest, the court held that the Nation's presence was required under Rule 19(a)(2). Id. at 961.¹³

[6] In the court's view, now is the time, i.e., before any merits claims are resolved, to determine whether the Tribes should be joined in this action under RCFC 19.¹⁴ While, strictly speaking, defendant has not moved for such joinder, it has, in its briefs, repeatedly challenged plaintiff's ability to bring this suit without the participation of the Tribes, asserting that plaintiff lacks "standing" to proceed independently.¹⁵

The record, in fact, suggests that there is an overlap between the membership and interests of the Tribes and the Klamath Claims Committee, particularly after the passage of the Restoration Act in 1986, which restored the Tribes' status. Several cases hold that the Tribes currently possess fishing and water rights that derive from the 1868 Treaty. See Kimball, 493 F.2d at 569 (fishing rights); Adair, 723 F.2d at 1410–1411 (water rights). While the exact contours of those rights remain to be determined elsewhere, it is essentially those same rights and associated fiduciary obligations—deriving from the same 1868 Treaty—that plaintiff seeks to vindicate in this case. Cf. Keweenaw Bay Indian Cmty., 11 F.3d at 1347 (invoking Rule 19(a) based on multiple parties claiming rights under the same treaty). Indeed, research reveals several other cases in which the Tribes and plaintiff were both involved because they claimed similar interests. See, e.g., Klamath Tribes of Oregon v. PacifiCorp, 2005 WL 1661821 (D.Or. July 13, 2005). Finally, when, at the court's request, plaintiff contacted the Tribes to obtain confirmation that it had the authority to pursue this litigation, the Chairman of the Tribes tellingly declined to provide that confirmation. In a letter dated June 17, 2010, the Chairman explained that the "Claims Committee was established during the Termination era before the restoration of federal recognition of the Tribes by the United States." He further stated that "[t]he Tribal Council simply is not, and I am not in a position to lend support to litigation over which the Klamath Tribes have no control, particularly where the litigation may potentially affect Tribal rights of the entire General Council membership."

[7] Based on these facts, which are essentially uncontested, the court finds that, in the absence of the Tribes, it cannot afford complete relief as between plaintiff and the United States. In addition, the court finds that the Tribes have claimed an interest in the remaining subject matter of this lawsuit *213 and that disposing of this case in the Tribes' absence may, as a practical matter, impede the Tribes' ability to protect that interest or leave the United States subject to inconsistent obligations. Accordingly, the court concludes that the Klamath Tribes are a party that should be joined to this action under RCFC 19(a). See Washington v. Daley, 173 F.3d 1158 (9th Cir.1999) (joinder of absent tribes required where State sued Secretary of Commerce challenging fishing regulations that impacted fishing treaty rights); Keweenaw Bay Indian Cmty., 11 F.3d at 1347 (same, but with respect to disputed fishing rights); Makah Indian Tribe, 910 F.2d at 559 (same, but with respect to federal regulations allocating salmon quotas); see also Nicholas V. Merkley, "Compulsory Party Joinder and Tribal Sovereign Immunity: A Proposal to Modify Federal Courts' Application of Rule 19 to Cases Involving Absent Tribes as 'Necessary' Parties," 56 Okla. L.Rev. 931, 944 (2003) (hereinafter "Compulsory Party Joinder and Tribal Sovereign Immunity").¹⁶

[8] RCFC 19(a)(2) provides that "[i]f a person has not been joined as required, the court must order that the person be made a party," adding that "[a] person who refuses to join as a plaintiff may be made either a defendant or, in a proper case, an involuntary plaintiff." Various cases, however, have held that the comparable provision in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a)(2)) is not triggered where, owing to sovereign immunity considerations, the entity required to be joined cannot be compelled to do so. That situation arises where an Indian tribe is the absent party. See 7 Federal Practice & Procedure § 1617 (citing cases involving the United States and noting that "the sovereign immunity guaranteed Indian tribes has produced parallel party-joinder issues in other litigation in which a tribe's rights are implicated.").¹⁷ While most cases of this ilk involve situations in which sovereign immunity prevents the addition of a party as a defendant, others have recognized that a sovereign cannot be haled into court against its will, even as a plaintiff.¹⁸

Courts confronted with this problem have employed a two-step process: First, they extend an invitation to the absent party to intervene under Rule 24. If that invitation is accepted, the provisions of Rule 19\(a\) are satisfied and the case proceeds to the merits. See, e.g., Narragansett Tribe of Indians v. S. R.I. Land Dev. Corp., 418 F.Supp. 798, 810–11 (D.R.I.1976).¹⁹ If it is declined, the court *214 moves to the second step, namely, a determination as to whether the absent sovereign is “indispensable.” If an absent sovereign proves “indispensable,” the case is then dismissed under Rule 19\(b\). See Davis, 343 F.3d at 1289; “Compulsory Party Joinder and Tribal Sovereign Immunity,” 56 Okla. L.Rev. at 963–64. In the court's view, it makes good sense to employ this process here, mindful of the sovereignty of the Tribes involved.

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the court hereby GRANTS, IN PART, defendant's motion to dismiss under RCFC 12\(b\)\(1\), dismissing, for lack of jurisdiction, plaintiff's claims to the extent they seek compensation for the non-disbursement of funds relating to the 1954 Act and the transfer of the Dam in 1973. As to the remainder of plaintiff's claims, the court hereby extends an invitation to the Tribes to seek intervene in this lawsuit; any motion to intervene shall be filed on or before April 11, 2011.²⁰ Should the Tribes decline to participate in this lawsuit, the court will determine whether they are “indispensable” parties under RCFC 19\(b\). The Clerk is hereby ordered to effectuate service of this order on an appropriate official of the Klamath Tribes.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

- 3 One of the core issues in this case is whether defendant ever disbursed these funds. Defendant submitted a 1958 report from the BIA's Portland office that lists the repayment to the Tribe under section 13(c) as “completed.” However, plaintiff submitted a 2008 request under the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, to the BIA for an accounting regarding the distribution of section 13(c) funds, to which the BIA responded that “no responsive records could be located.”

No. 89–224, 79 Stat. 897 (codified, as amended, at 25 U.S.C. §§ 565–565g), addressed various claims that the Tribes had pursued against the United States. The law authorized funds to be used in settling these claims. Id. As part of this Act, the BIA could retain funds for the benefit of the Tribes “or any of its constituent parts or groups” for the purpose of “paying unusual and accustomed expenses prosecuting claims against the United States.” 25 U.S.C. § 565.

- 6 The United States and the Tribes jointly filed water rights claims as part of Oregon's adjudication of the Klamath River Basin. - 7 Plaintiff's briefs also assert that it is entitled to damages associated with the loss of fishing rights; those rights, however, are not referenced in the amended complaint. For purposes of this motion, the court will assume, arguendo, that these fishing rights were impacted by the loss of the water storage associated with the Dam. Should this case proceed to the merits, however, this matter will need to be clarified.

United States*, 541 F.3d 1189, 1197 (9th Cir.2008) (“Although ordinarily the defendant bears the burden of proving an affirmative statute of limitations defense, here the statute of limitations is jurisdictional, and, [w]hen subject matter jurisdiction is challenged under Federal Rule of Procedure 12(b)(1), the plaintiff has the burden of proving jurisdiction in order to survive the motion.” (quoting Tosco Corp. v. Comtys. for a Better Env't, 236 F.3d 495, 499 (9th Cir.2001))).

9 Plaintiff asserts that there was no deadline for this disbursement. But, the Court of Claims concluded otherwise in Klamath and Modoc Tribes. There, the court stated that “the distribution of the proceeds” was “to be completed at the earliest practicable time but not later than August 13, 1958.” 436 F.2d at 1011. The opinion in Klamath and Modoc Tribes then catalogued the legislative extensions of this deadline and the reasons therefor. Id. at 1011–13.

10 On brief, plaintiff claims that the actual transfer of the Dam did not occur until 2007. But, it has provided no support for this assertion.

11 In this regard, RCFC 19(b) states—

The factors for the court to consider include:

(1) the extent to which a judgment rendered in the person's absence might prejudice that person or the existing parties;

(2) the extent to which any prejudice could be lessened or avoided by:

(A) protective provisions in the judgment;

(B) shaping the relief; or

(C) other measures;

(3) whether a judgment rendered in the person's absence would be adequate; and

(4) whether the plaintiff would have an adequate remedy if the action were dismissed for nonjoinder.

12 Although this terminology is no longer found in the rules, individuals whose joinder is obliged under RCFC 19(a) would have previously been called “necessary parties,” while those whose absence would compel dismissal of the action under RCFC 19(b) would have been called “indispensable parties.” The latter terminology was abandoned because it “had an unforgiving connotation that did not fit easily with a system that permits actions to proceed even when some persons who otherwise should be parties to the action cannot be joined.” Philippines, 553 U.S. at 863, 128 S.Ct. 2180. Though the language has changed, Rule 19(b) still creates the “‘verbal anomaly’” of “[r]equired persons [who] may turn out not to be required for the action to proceed after all.” Philippines, 553 U.S. at 863, 128 S.Ct. 2180 (quoting Provident Tradesmens Bank, 390 U.S. at 117 n. 12, 88 S.Ct. 733).

13 See also Am. Greyhound Racing, Inc. v. Hull, 305 F.3d 1015, 1024 (9th Cir.2002) (Indian tribes with existing compacts with state for operating gaming casinos had interest in action brought to enjoin Governor of Arizona from entering into new gaming compacts that would expand the scope of Indian gaming); Shermoen, 982 F.2d at 1318 (Hoopa Valley and Yurok Tribes had interest in outcome of action by individual Indians challenging the constitutionality of Hoopa–Yurok Settlement Act).

14 The rules do not address whether concerns arising under RCFC 19 should be resolved prior to deciding a motion to dismiss under RCFC 12(b)(6). To be sure, RCFC 12(b)(7) indicates that defendant may file a motion to dismiss based upon the “failure to join a party under Rule 19.” But, nothing in this provision suggests that a motion under RCFC 12(b)(6) must be considered before one under RCFC 12(b)(7). Nor is any such ordering implied by RCFC 12(h)(2), which indicates that a “[f]ailure to state claim upon which relief can be granted [or] to join a person required by Rule 19(b)” may be filed in a pleading under RCFC 7(a), a motion for judgment on the pleadings under RCFC 12(c) or at trial. Logic suggests that the concerns raised under RCFC 19(a)—that the court might not be able to accord complete relief among existing parties or that the absentee's ability to protect its interests may be impaired or impeded by a ruling—ought to be resolved before the court resolves any issues on the merits. See Keweenaw Bay Indian Comty., 11 F.3d at 1348; Tankersley v. Albright, 514 F.2d 956, 965–66 (7th Cir.1975) (“[The interests served by Rule 19] must be weighed and the necessity or indispensability of absent persons determined prior to any consideration of the merits of a case.”). Notably, it is well-established that questions involving jurisdiction, including the statute of limitations questions addressed above, should be resolved before the court considers the application of RCFC 19. See Rosales v. United States, 89 Fed.Cl. 565, 584 n. 21 (2009).

15 Even if defendant had not raised this issue, the court could consider the absence of a required person sua sponte. See Philippines, 553 U.S. at 860, 128 S.Ct. 2180; Minnesota v. Northern Secs. Co., 184 U.S. 199, 235, 22 S.Ct. 308, 46 L.Ed. 499 (1902); see also Provident Tradesmens Bank, 390 U.S. at 111, 88 S.Ct. 733.

16 In some cases, courts have held that absent tribes are not “necessary” parties under Rule 19 because the federal government may adequately represent the tribes' interest. These cases, however, hold this is true “only so long as ‘no conflict exists between the United States and the nonparty beneficiaries.’” Citizen Potawatomi Nation v. Norton, 248 F.3d 993, 999 (10th Cir.2001) (quoting Davis, 192 F.3d at 958). Here, it does not appear that the United States can adequately represent the interests of the absent Tribes, at least insofar as plaintiff claims that defendant's actions impaired the Tribes' water rights.

17 As noted by the D.C. Circuit, “[t]he doctrine of tribal immunity, which recognizes the sovereignty of Indian tribes and seeks to preserve their autonomy, protects tribes from suits in federal and state courts.” Wichita & Affiliated Tribes of Okla. v. Hodel, 788 F.2d 765, 771 (D.C.Cir.1986); see also Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 58, 98 S.Ct. 1670, 56 L.Ed.2d 106 (1978); United States v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 309 U.S. 506, 512–13, 60 S.Ct. 653, 84 L.Ed. 894 (1940); “Compulsory Party Joinder and Tribal Sovereign Immunity,” 56 Okla. L.Rev. at 940–42.

- 18 See Clinton v. Babbitt, 180 F.3d 1081, 1090 (9th Cir.1998) (“because the Hopi Tribe enjoys sovereign immunity ... it cannot be joined as a party without its consent”); Kescoli v. Babbitt, 101 F.3d 1304, 1310 (9th Cir.1996); Wichita & Affiliated Tribes of Okla., 788 F.2d at 771 (“tribal immunity quickly surfaces as a crucial issue in such a suit since if the tribe is indispensable party, and cannot be joined due to its immunity, the claim may not proceed”); 7 Federal Practice & Procedure § 1617; see also “Compulsory Party Joinder and Tribal Sovereign Immunity,” 56 Okla. L.Rev. at 948 (“Courts labeling absent tribes as necessary parties have recognized that tribal sovereign immunity prevents them from joining the tribes as parties to the lawsuit.”). It, of course, makes no sense to issue an order under RCFC 19(a)(2) that is unenforceable. Garpeg, Ltd. v. United States, 583 F.Supp. 789, 799 (S.D.N.Y.1984); Fed. Practice & Procedure § 2945 (courts will avoid “futile gesture” of issuing unenforceable order).
- 19 Under RCFC 24(a), an absentee has a right to intervene when a statute confers the right or when it “claims an interest relating to the property or transaction that is the subject of the action, and is so situated that disposing of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the movant's ability to protect its interest, unless existing parties adequately represent that interest.” As the Federal Circuit has observed, this standard is essentially identical to that in RCFC 19(a)(1)(B)(i). See United Keetoowah Band, 480 F.3d at 1324–25; see also Klamath Irr. Dist. v. United States, 64 Fed.Cl. 328, 329–30 (2005) (“By way of further analogy to the Federal Rules, the findings required by RCFC 24(a)(2) are identical to those required by RCFC 19(a)(2), dealing with joinder of person needed for just adjudications, revealing an obvious symmetry between these two gatekeeper provisions.”).
- 20 In lieu of such a motion, the Tribes may make such other filing (e.g., a memorandum setting forth their position on the joinder issue) as they deem appropriate.

Synopsis

Dismissed.

West Headnotes (4)

[1] Indians 🔑 Sovereign Immunity

Indian tribes possess common-law immunity from suit traditionally enjoyed by sovereign powers.

[2] Indians 🔑 Sovereign Immunity

Indian tribe cannot be haled into court against its will, even as plaintiff.

[3] Federal Courts 🔑 Parties; Class Actions and New Parties

Klamath tribes were indispensable parties in action brought by Klamath Tribe Claims Committee alleging that removal of dam effected taking of tribes' associated water and fishing rights and constituted breach of fiduciary duties established by tribes' treaty with United States and Klamath Termination Act, and thus dismissal of Committee's action was warranted after Tribes elected not to intervene, even though it was likely Committee would be left without any ability to recoup compensation for its claimed injuries, where Tribes asserted nonfrivolous interest in subject matter of suit that might be impaired by adverse ruling, and disposition of dispute in Tribes' absence threatened to leave United States subject to multiple and conflicting claims with respect to fishing and water rights conferred by treaty. RCFC, Rule 19\(b\), 28 U.S.C.A.

[4] Federal Courts 🔑 Parties; Class Actions and New Parties

Where sovereign party should be joined in action, but cannot be owing to sovereign immunity, entire case must be dismissed if there is potential for sovereign's interests to be injured, even when no alternative forum exists in which plaintiff can press its case. OPINION

ALLEGRA, Judge:

*1 The Klamath Tribe Claims Committee (Klamath Claims Committee or plaintiff) seeks damages for alleged takings and breaches of fiduciary duty committed by the Department of the Interior (Interior). It asserts that Interior has failed to disburse funds owed to tribal members and to safeguard treaty-based water rights associated with a dam. On February 11, 2011, the court granted, in part, a motion filed by defendant, and dismissed two of plaintiff's counts for lack of jurisdiction. As to the remaining counts, this court concluded, under RCFC 19, that a necessary party, the Klamath Tribes (the Tribes)¹ must be joined. Subsequently, the Tribes declined to participate in this lawsuit. Accordingly, the court must now determine whether the Tribes is an indispensable party under RCFC 19\(b\). For the reasons that follow, the court concludes that the Tribes, indeed, is an indispensable party and that the inability to join it in this lawsuit requires that the complaint be dismissed.

I. BACKGROUND

A brief recitation of the facts provides necessary context.

The United States and the Tribes entered into a Treaty in 1864. See Treaty between the United States and the Klamath and Moadoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, October 14, 1864, 16 Stat. 707 (the Treaty). Under this Treaty, the Tribes ceded their interest in approximately twelve million acres of land, reserving unto themselves approximately 800,000 acres, along with “the exclusive right of taking fish in the streams and lakes, included in said reservation, and of gathering edible roots, seeds, and berries within its limits.” Id. In exchange, the federal government gave the Tribes cash and goods worth approximately $300,000. It also committed to provide various services to the Tribes and to hold tribal assets in trust for the benefit of the Tribes and its members. Id. From 1890 to 1920, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) surveyed the reservation for its irrigation potential and constructed irrigation facilities. One such facility was a diversion dam, the Chiloquin Dam (the Dam), that diverted portions of the Sprague River into canals which served lands on the Williamson River and Upper Klamath Lake.

In 1954, Congress passed the Klamath Termination Act (the 1954 Act), Pub.L. No. 83–587, 68 Stat. 718 (codified, as amended, at 25 U.S.C. §§ 564–564x), which ended federal supervision over the Tribes' trust assets and tribal properties, and terminated the federal services furnished to the Tribes. As described by the Court of Claims in an earlier case—

[t]he basic scheme of that statute ... was to give each adult member whose name appeared on the final tribal roll an election between withdrawing from the tribe and having his interest in tribal property commuted to money to be paid to him, and, on the other hand, remaining in the tribe and participating in a nongovernmental tribal management plan.

Klamath & Modoc Tribes v. United States, 193 Ct.Cl. 670, 436 F.2d 1008, 1010–11 (Ct.Cl.1971).² Section 10 of the 1954 Act authorized the government to dispose of federally-owned property acquired for administration of the Tribes or to transfer this property to qualifying entities. 1954 Act § 10 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564i). Other provisions in this statute dealt with the federally-owned and operated irrigation facilities on the Klamath Reservation, including the Dam. For example, section 13(a) of the 1954 Act authorized the Secretary to transfer the “care, operation and maintenance” of irrigation works to water users associations or irrigation districts. 1954 Act § 13(a) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 5641(a)).

*2 Section 13(c) of the 1954 Act “authorized to be appropriated” $89,212 for “payment to the Klamath Tribe[s]” at four percent interest “per annum,” calculated from the date of disbursement. 1954 Act § 13(c) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 5641 (c)). The 1954 Act stated that these funds were “reimbursement for tribal funds used for irrigation, construction, operation and maintenance benefitting nontribal lands on the Klamath Reservation.” Id. It further directed the Secretary to transfer all personal property or funds that the United States held in trust, free of encumbrance, to tribal members within four years. 1954 Act § 8 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564g). The Secretary was directed to arrange for the disposition of the Tribes' property at the earliest practicable time, but not later than August 13, 1958. 1954 Act § 6(b) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564e(b)); see also Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011. Once the restrictions on the Tribes' property were removed, the Secretary was to publish a proclamation in the Federal Register that the trust relationship between the Tribes and the United States was terminated. 1954 Act § 18 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564q). Finally, the 1954 Act expressly preserved the Tribes' water and fishing rights as granted under the 1864 Treaty. 1954 Act § 14 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564m).

Following the passage of this legislation, approximately seventy-eight percent of the Tribes' members (1,660 of 2,133) chose to withdraw, and defendant used its authority under Section 10 of the Act to sell off much of the Tribes' property to pay these withdrawing members. See Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011. The Secretary transferred the remaining tribal property to a private trustee to be maintained for those members who chose to remain with the Tribes. In 1955, about a year after the passage of the 1954 Act, Congress appropriated funds to reimburse the Tribes for money expended to construct, operate and maintain irrigation facilities benefiting non-tribal lands. See Dept. of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act of 1956, Pub.L. No. 84–78, ch. 147, 69 Stat. 141, 143 (June 16, 1955). In 1961, the Secretary published a notice in the Federal Register stating that the federal government's relationship with the Tribe was officially terminated. 26 Fed.Reg. 7,362 (Aug. 12, 1961).

On August 21, 1961, the Tribes' governing body passed a resolution giving the Klamath Claims Committee authority to pursue certain claims against the United States. See Joint Resolution of Tribal Councils, March 2008 (describing the earlier resolution). The Klamath Claims Committee represents all 2,133 individuals who appeared on the rolls of the Tribes as of the date of their termination under the 1954 Act. In 1961, the Tribes and several individuals (both withdrawing and remaining members for themselves and as representatives for similarly-situated individuals) filed suit against the United States in the U.S. Court of Claims alleging that the United States effectuated a takings in implementing the 1954 Act. Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1012. In 1962, seventy-three withdrawn members filed a similar suit. Id. at 1013. The Court of Claims consolidated the two cases in 1964. Id. at 1010. The takings claims were eventually settled for approximately $23.5 million. See Klamath & Modoc Tribes v. United States, 199 Ct.Cl. 1024 (Ct.Cl. Sept. 18, 1972). The settlement was effectuated, in part, via legislation passed by Congress in 1965.³

*3 Although the government-to-government relationship between the Tribes and the United States ceased in 1961, BIA took several years to conclude operations and transfer its irrigation project facilities. In 1973, Interior transferred title to the Dam to the Modoc Point Irrigation District (MPID), a non-federal entity chartered under Oregon law, made up of landowners. MPID accepted the transfer in 1974. See Operation and Maintenance Charges, Deletion of Needless Regulations, 44 Fed.Reg. 12,192 (Mar. 6, 1979). In 1979, BIA published a notice deleting all the regulations pertaining to the irrigation system in light of the 1973 transfer of ownership to the MPID. Id. Nevertheless, several court decisions at or around this time confirmed that the Tribes' rights to certain natural resources under the 1864 Treaty survived the passage of the Termination Act. See Kimball v. Callahan, 493 F.2d 564 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1019, 95 S.Ct. 491, 42 L.Ed.2d 292 (1974) (treaty-reserved hunting and fishing rights on former reservation lands survived termination); United States v. Adair, 723 F.2d 1394 (9th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1252, 104 S.Ct. 3536, 82 L.Ed.2d 841 (1984) (same as to implied reserved water rights).

In 1986, Congress passed the Klamath Indian Tribe Restoration Act (the Restoration Act), Pub.L. No. 99–398, 100 Stat. 849 (Aug. 27, 1986) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 566), reestablishing federal recognition of the Tribes. While the Restoration Act restored the Tribes' federal services, as well as the government-to-government relationship between the Tribe and the United States, it did not alter existing property rights. See 25 U.S.C. § 566(d).

Throughout the post-termination and subsequent restoration period, the Klamath Claims Committee believed that it had broad authority to represent the Tribes and its members in tribal litigation. Several resolutions of the Committee reflect this. For example, a 1983 resolution that states that the Tribes' August 21, 1961, grant of authority designated the Klamath Claims Committee as "the post-termination representative body of the Tribe" with respect to the "supervision and management of tribal claims against the United States for all dealings." Klamath Claims Committee Resolution, January 1983; see also Klamath Claims Committee Resolutions, June 1996; Klamath Claims Committee Resolution, May 1996. In 1993, the Tribes authorized plaintiff to work with BIA to disburse judgments from cases in which plaintiff, acting on behalf of the 1954 membership, was successful. See Klamath Tribe Executive Resolution, July 1993. More recently, the governing body of the Tribes authorized the Klamath Claims Committee to use funds to "pursue claims, including but not limited to claims now being prosecuted against PacifiCorp." See Joint Resolution of Tribal Council, March 2008.⁴ This resolution, however, did not give the Committee exclusive authority to pursue the Pacificorp litigation, as it envisioned that the Tribes would also participate in that litigation. Id. The same resolution indicated that, to the extent that the Klamath Claims Committee pursued "other claims" outside of the Pacificorp case, it must act "within [its] authority as established by the General Counsel." *Id.*⁵

*4 In the late 1980s, Interior determined that the Dam and its fish ladder were adversely affecting several fish species listed as "endangered" under the Endangered Species Act of 1973, 87 Stat. 884, 16 U.S.C. § 1531 et seq. In 2001, Congress authorized a study to assess alternatives for improving fish passage at the Dam. See Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002, Pub.L. No. 107-171, § 10905, 116 Stat. 134, 537. After consulting with the MPID and the Tribes, Interior determined that the best course of action was removing the Dam. In 2006, BIA negotiated a cooperative agreement with MPID under which Interior would pay to remove the Dam and construct an alternative electric pump plant for irrigation. MPID landowners voted in favor of Dam removal, and signed a cooperative agreement with the BIA. The Dam was removed in August 2008.

Plaintiff filed its initial complaint in this court on February 6, 2009, and an amended complaint on March 17, 2009. The latter advances four causes of action: (i) a takings of Indian trust assets based on the government's failure to reimburse the Tribes as authorized by section 13 of the 1954 Act; (ii) a breach of fiduciary duty based on the failure to disburse the section 13 authorized funds; (iii) a takings based on the removal of the Chiloquin Dam and its associated water storage; and (iv) a breach of fiduciary duty based on the removal of the Dam and its associated water storage. Plaintiff asserted that this court possesses jurisdiction over these claims under the Indian Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1505. On May 7, 2009, defendant filed a motion to dismiss under RCFC 12(b)(1) and (6).

On February 11, 2011, the court granted, in part, defendant's motion. It held that plaintiff's claims involving the disbursements required by section 13 of the 1954 Act and relating to the transfer of the Chiloquin Dam fell far outside the six-year statute of limitations established by 28 U.S.C. § 2501, and thus must be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. See Klamath Tribe Claims Comm. v. United States, 97 Fed.Cl. 203, 209 (2011) (Klamath Tribe Claims Comm. I). The court, however, held that it had jurisdiction over the remainder of plaintiff's claims relating to the removal of the Dam in August of 2008. Id. at 210. As to those claims, the court concluded that the Tribes "are a party that should be joined to this action under RCFC 19(a)." Id. at 213. In this regard, the court noted that "there is an overlap between the membership and interests of the Tribes and the Klamath Claims Committee, particularly after the passage of the Restoration Act in 1986." Id. at 212. Observing that "the Tribes currently possess fishing and water rights that derive from the 1864 Treaty," the court noted that it is "essentially those same rights and associated fiduciary obligations—deriving from the same 1864 Treaty—that plaintiff seeks to vindicate in this case." Id. Despite this, it found that in communications with plaintiff's counsel, the Chairman of the Tribes had indicated that he was "not in a position to lend support to litigation over which the Klamath Tribes have no control, particularly where the litigation may potentially affect Tribal rights of the entire General Council membership." Id. (quoting a letter from the Chairman of the Tribes).

*5 "Based on these facts," the court concluded that "in the absence of the Tribes, it cannot afford complete relief as between plaintiff and the United States." Id. It further found "that the Tribes has claimed an interest in the remaining subject matter of this lawsuit and that disposing of this case in the Tribes' absence may, as a practical matter, impede the Tribes' ability to protect that interest or leave the United States subject to inconsistent obligations." Id. at 212–13. Because the Tribes is a sovereign, the court determined that the appropriate process was to extend an invitation to the Tribes to intervene in this case under RCFC 24.

Id. at 214. The court stated that if the Tribes declined that invitation, it would determine whether the Tribes was “indispensable,” further observing that if this was so, the case would then be dismissed under RCFC 19\(b\). Id.

On April 20, 2011, the Klamath Tribes responded to this court's invitation, declining to intervene in this matter. This response, nonetheless, asserted that the Tribes “have an interest in the remaining subject matter of this lawsuit” and that “disposing of this case in the Tribes' absence may, as a practical matter, impede the Tribes' ability to protect that interest.” Lastly it indicated that “the Plaintiff Claims Committee has no authority to speak for or represent the Tribes.”⁶ On August 11, 2011, following the death and replacement of plaintiff's counsel, this court ordered the parties to file simultaneous briefs addressing whether the Tribes were indispensable under RCFC 19\(b\). In an amicus filing, the Tribes “expressly reserve[d] its sovereign immunity from suit in this action,” declaring the rights at issue to be ones “that belong to the Tribes.” This amicus brief further claimed that plaintiff is “in fact acting hostilely to the Tribes, asserting control over tribal rights, and inviting this Court to de-legitimize the Tribes.”

The parties' briefing on the RCFC 19\(b\) issue is now completed. Argument is deemed unnecessary.

II. DISCUSSION

[1] [2] Indian tribes possess “the common-law immunity from suit traditionally enjoyed by sovereign powers.” Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 58, 98 S.Ct. 1670, 56 L.Ed.2d 106 (1978); see also Kiowa Tribe v. Mfg. Techs., Inc., 523 U.S. 751, 753–54, 118 S.Ct. 1700, 140 L.Ed.2d 981 (1998). Like all sovereigns, they are free to assert or to waive their immunity, as they see fit. Okla. Tax Comm'n v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe, 498 U.S. 505, 509, 111 S.Ct. 905, 112 L.Ed.2d 1112 (1991). One aspect of this immunity is that a tribe “cannot be haled into court against its will, even as a plaintiff.” Klamath Claims Comm. I, 97 Fed.Cl. at 213.⁷ In this case, the Tribes has refused an invitation to intervene in this action under RCFC 24. In that situation, the court must determine whether dismissal here is warranted under RCFC 19\(b\). See Klamath Claims Comm. I, 97 Fed.Cl. at 213–14; see also Narragansett Tribe of Indians v. S.R.I. Land Dev. Corp., 418 F.Supp. 798, 810–11 (D.R.I.1976).

*6 Under RCFC 19\(b\), “[i]f a person who is required to be joined if feasible cannot be joined, the court must determine whether, in equity and good conscience, the action should proceed among the existing parties or should be dismissed.” Specifically, the rule indicates that, in making this determination, factors for the court to consider include:

- (1) the extent to which a judgment rendered in the person's absence might prejudice that person or the existing parties;
- (2) the extent to which any prejudice could be lessened or avoided by:
 - (A) protective provisions in the judgment;
 - (B) shaping the relief; or
 - (C) other measures;
- (3) whether a judgment rendered in the person's absence would be adequate, and
- (4) whether the person would have an adequate remedy if the action were dismissed for nonjoinder.

RCFC 19\(b\).⁸ This decision “is to be made in the light of pragmatic considerations.” Fed.R.Civ.P., Advisory Comm. notes (1966); see also Roos v. Texas Co., 23 F.2d 171 (2d Cir.1927), cert. denied, 277 U.S. 587, 48 S.Ct. 434, 72 L.Ed. 1001 (1928); H.H. Robertson Co. v. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co., 94 F.R.D. 578, 579 (W.D.Pa.1982), aff'd, 696 F.2d 982 (3d Cir.1982).⁹ “It must be based on factors varying with the different cases,” the Supreme Court has observed, “some procedural, some compelling by themselves, and some subject to balancing against opposing interests.” Provident Tradesmens Bank & Trust Co. v. Patterson, 390 U.S. 102, 119, 88 S.Ct. 733, 19 L.Ed.2d 936 (1968); see also Pimentel, 553 U.S. at 863 (“multiple factors must bear on the decision whether to proceed without a required person”); Kickapoo Tribe of Indians of Kickapoo Reservation in Kansas v. Babbitt, 43 F.3d 1491, 1495 (D.C.Cir.1995).

In Provident, Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for a unanimous Court, parsed the factors in Rule 19. First, he noted, how the factors reflect the interests of the parties before the Court—

First, the plaintiff has an interest in having a forum. Before the trial, the strength of this interest obviously depends upon whether a satisfactory alternative forum exists.... Second, the defendant may properly wish to avoid multiple litigation, or inconsistent relief, or sole responsibility for a liability he shares with another.

Id. at 109–10. Also manifest in the factors, Justice Harlan wrote, “is the interest of the outsider whom it would have been desirable to join.” Id. at 110. On this point, the Provident Court expounded—

Of course, since the outsider is not before the court, he cannot be bound by the judgment rendered. This means, however, only that a judgment is not res judicata as to, or legally enforceable against, a nonparty. It obviously does not mean either (a) that a court may never issue a judgment that, in practice, affects a nonparty or (b) that (to the contrary) a court may always proceed without considering the potential effect on nonparties simply because they are not ‘bound’ in the technical sense. Instead, as Rule 19(a) expresses it, the court must consider the extent to which the judgment may ‘as a practical matter impair or impede his ability to protect’ his interest in the subject matter.

*7 Id. at 110–11. Finally, “there remains the interest of the courts and the public in complete, consistent, and efficient settlement of controversies,” which implicates the “public’s stake in settling disputes by wholes, whenever possible, for clearly the plaintiff, who himself chose both the forum and the parties defendant, will not be heard to complain about the sufficiency of the relief obtainable against them.” Id. at 111.¹⁰

That plaintiff lacks an adequate remedy if this suit is dismissed weighs against dismissal. This court has exclusive jurisdiction over the takings and breach of fiduciary duty claims that remain at issue in this case. See United States v. Tohono O’Odham Nation, — U.S. —, — — —, 131 S.Ct. 1723, 1729–31, 179 L.Ed.2d 723 (2011); Trusted Integration v. United States, 659 F.3d 1159, 1162 (Fed.Cir.2011); Morris v. United States, 392 F.3d 1372, 1375 (Fed.Cir.2004). Conversely, a U.S. district court would lack jurisdiction to provide any relief to plaintiff under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 702 and 704.¹¹ Accordingly, if this suit is dismissed, plaintiff likely will be left without any ability to recoup compensation for the injuries it claims. In such an instance, the decisional law indicates that this court should be “‘extra cautious’ before dismissing an action.” Kescoli, 101 F.3d at 1310 (quoting Makah Indian Tribe v. Verity, 910 F.2d 555, 558 (9th Cir.1990)).¹²

[3] But, there are countervailing considerations here. Courts generally afford sovereigns “heightened protection” if a lawsuit poses “a potential of injury to the sovereign’s interest.” Odyssey Marine Exploration, Inc. v. Unidentified Shipwrecked Vessel, 657 F.3d 1159, 1181 (11th Cir.2011), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 132 S.Ct. 2379, 182 L.Ed.2d 1051 (2012). This consideration has often led courts to dismiss in cases where the United States is the absent party. See Mine Safety Appliances Co. v. Forrestal, 326 U.S. 371, 375, 66 S.Ct. 219, 90 L.Ed. 140 (1945); State of Minnesota v. United States, 305 U.S. 382, 388–89, 59 S.Ct. 292, 83 L.Ed. 235 (1939). And there likewise is a “strong policy that has favored dismissal when a court cannot join a tribe because of sovereign immunity.” Davis v. United States, 192 F.3d 951, 960 (10th Cir.1999), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 937, 124 S.Ct. 2907, 159 L.Ed.2d 812 (2004).¹³ Indeed, “[w]hen ... a necessary party ... is immune from suit, there is very little room for balancing of other factors set out in Rule 19(b), because immunity may be viewed as one of those interests compelling by themselves.” Enterprise Mgmt. Consultants, Inc. v. United States ex rel. Hodel, 883 F.2d 890, 894 (10th Cir.1989) (quoting Wichita & Affiliated Tribes, 788 F.2d at 777 (quoting 3A Moore’s Federal Practice ¶ 19.15, at 19–266 n. 6 (1984))).¹⁴ While “this does not mean that balancing can be completely avoided simply because an absent person is immune from suit,” it does mean that “the plaintiff’s inability to obtain relief in an alternative forum is not as weighty a factor when the source of that inability is a public policy that immunizes the absent party from suit.” Davis ex rel. Davis v. United States, 343 F.3d 1282, 1293–94 (10th Cir.2003), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 937, 124 S.Ct. 2907, 159 L.Ed.2d 812 (2004); see also N. Arapaho Tribe v. Harnsberger, 660 F.Supp.2d 1264, 1283 (D.Wyo.2009).

*8 Recently, in Pimentel, 553 U.S. 851, 128 S.Ct. 2180, 171 L.Ed.2d 131, the Supreme Court elaborated on the importance of sovereign immunity plays in the balancing analysis required by Rule 19(b). In that case, various parties claimed assets in a Merrill Lynch brokerage account that included funds which allegedly had been illicitly obtained by former Philippines President Marcos. Id. at 857. Originally, the Republic of the Philippines and a sovereign Filipino Commission were included as defendants in the action, via interpleader, but were later dismissed after they successfully invoked the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1604, 1609. Id. at 859. After this dismissal, the district court awarded the funds to another party. Id. at 860. The Ninth Circuit affirmed this ruling, holding that while the Republic and the Commission were necessary parties under Rule 19(a) and entitled to be dismissed based on sovereign immunity, their claim to the disputed assets was unlikely to succeed on the merits.¹⁵ The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the lower courts erred in their analysis of Rule 19(b) because they had “not accord[ed] proper weight to the compelling claim of sovereign immunity.” Pimentel, 553 U.S. at 869. Framing the rationale of the Court, Justice Kennedy stated that cases “involving the intersection of joinder and the governmental immunity of the United States ... instruct us that where sovereign immunity is asserted, and the claims of the sovereign are not frivolous, dismissal of the action must be ordered where there is a potential for injury to the interests of the absent sovereign.” Id. at 867. Recognizing that “[d]ismissal under Rule 19(b) will mean, in some instances, that plaintiff will be left without a forum for definitive resolution of their claims,” the Court, nonetheless, concluded that this “result is contemplated under the doctrine of foreign sovereign immunity.” Id. at 872.

[4] While Pimentel is, in some regards, distinguishable,¹⁶ it, nevertheless, illustrates that sovereign immunity often will be compelling itself in swaying the Rule 19(b) analysis. Pimentel stands for the proposition that where a sovereign party should be joined in an action, but cannot be owing to sovereign immunity, the entire case must be dismissed if there is the potential for the interests of the sovereign to be injured. And this result obtains even when no alternative forum exists in which the plaintiff can press its case. As subsequent cases confirm, this rationale applies to domestic sovereigns, i.e., States and Indian nations, as much as it does to foreign sovereigns, e.g., the Philippines. See Vann v. Salazar, 2011 WL 4953030, at * 3–4 (D.D.C.2011); N. Arapaho Tribe, 660 F.Supp.2d at 1287; see also A123 Sys., Inc. v. Hydro-Quebec, 626 F.3d 1213, 1221 (Fed.Cir.2010).¹⁷

This rationale weighs heavily in favor of dismissing this case owing to the absence of the Tribes. Although the Tribes has decided not to intervene, it has asserted a nonfrivolous interest in the subject matter of this suit that might be impaired by an adverse ruling in this case. Even without a direct preclusive effect,¹⁸ such a ruling would be a negative precedent that the Tribes would have to confront in future litigation involving the 1864 Treaty and the associated statutes. See Acton Co., Inc. of Mass. v. Bachman Foods, Inc., 668 F.2d 76, 78–79 (1st Cir.1982) (“Even if Acton would not be legally bound, an adverse ruling would be persuasive precedent in a subsequent proceeding, and would weaken Acton's bargaining position for settlement purposes.”); Doty v. St. Mary Parish Land Co., 598 F.2d 885, 887 (5th Cir.1979) (dismissing case under Rule 19(b) because “an unfavorable judgment in the present case would constitute precedent adverse to the [absent party's] claims”); Johnson & Johnson, 720 F.Supp. at 1123–25 (same). And that negative precedent could ripen into binding adverse precedent were this court's ruling affirmed by the Federal Circuit. Thus, it would appear that to proceed without the Tribes might “as a practical matter impair or impede” the Tribe's ability to protect its sovereign interests. See RCFC 19(a); Provident, 390 U.S. at 110 (stating that when considering the “interest of the outsider whom it would have been desirable to join,” the court should consider the “practical” impact of a judgment on that interest); Picciotto v. Continental Cas. Co., 512 F.3d 9, 16–17 (1st Cir.2008).

*9 Adding weight to that conclusion is the fact that any disposition here in the Tribes' absence threatens to leave defendant subject to multiple and conflicting claims with respect to the same fishing and water rights conferred by the 1864 Treaty. Plaintiff and the Tribes, whose memberships are different,¹⁹ assert at least partially overlapping claims to those rights. To the extent, moreover, that the Tribes' claims hinge on the removal of the Chiloquin Dam, the statute of limitations under 28 U.S.C. § 2501 is still open and will remain so until August of 2014. See Klamath Tribes Claims Comm. I, 97 Fed.Cl. at 210. Accordingly, if this suit proceeds, the United States could find itself subject to competing claims for the same compensation. For this and other reasons, this is not a case in which the interests of the Tribes may be adequately represented by the United States. Id. at 213 n. 16.²⁰ Per contra. Indeed, in numerous recent cases, the United States has urged this court to construe narrowly the trust and treaty responsibilities it owes to various Tribes, both for jurisdictional and merits purposes. See, e.g., Jicarilla Apache Nation v. United States, 100 Fed.Cl. 726 (2011). There is no reason to believe that defendant will be any less zealous in pressing its claims in this case, with obvious implications for the Tribes if the United States were to prevail on these points. See Provident, 390 U.S. at 110.²¹ Nor does this court see any way that, under RCFC 19(b)(2), “any prejudice could be lessened or avoided” if this suit were allowed to proceed.

Accordingly, a majority of the factors in RCFC 19(b) weigh heavily in favor of holding the Tribes an indispensable party. As such, the court finds that the Tribes is not only a necessary party, but also an indispensable one, compelling dismissal.²²

The court will not gild the lily. For the foregoing reasons, the court hereby orders the Clerk to DISMISS plaintiff’s complaint. No costs.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Footnotes

- 1 The present-day Klamath Tribes is a single, federally-recognized tribal government that uses the plural “Tribes” to reflect the fact that it is composed of the Klamath and Modoc Tribes, and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians. The court adopts the Tribes’ convention of referring to itself in the singular.
- 2 The 1954 Act created a process in which a list of remaining and withdrawing members was prepared. See 1954 Act § 3 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564b). Upon publication of the final roll, the Act directed that “the rights or beneficial interests in tribal property of each person whose name appears on the roll shall constitute personal property.” See 1954 Act § 4 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564c). The 1954 Act directed that $250 be distributed, per capita, to each individual listed on the final roll. 1954 Act § 7 (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 564f); see Klamath & Modoc Tribes, 436 F.2d at 1011.
- 3 The Klamath Judgment Distribution Act of 1965, Pub.L. No. 89–224, 79 Stat. 897 (codified, as amended, at 25 U.S.C. §§ 565–565g), addressed various claims that the Tribes had pursued against the United States. The law authorized funds to be used in settling these claims. Id. As part of this Act, the BIA could retain funds for the benefit of the Tribes “or any of its constituent parts or groups” for the purpose of “paying the usual and accustomed expenses of prosecuting claims against the United States.” 25 U.S.C. § 565.
- 4 In their suit against Pacificorp, the Tribes sought damages for the disruption of salmon fish runs resulting from the construction and operation of government-authorized hydroelectric dams on the Klamath River. See Klamath Tribes of Or. v. Pacificorp, 2005 WL 1661821 (D.Or. July 13, 2005), aff’d, 268 Fed.Appx. 575 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 821, 129 S.Ct. 109, 172 L.Ed.2d 34 (2008).
- 5 The United States and the Tribes jointly filed water rights claims as part of Oregon’s adjudication of the Klamath River Basin. This adjudication will conclusively quantify, pursuant to the McCarran Amendment, the water rights recognized in Adair and held in trust by the United States for the Tribes. 43 U.S.C. § 666; United States v. Oregon, 44 F.3d 758 (9th Cir.1994), cert. denied sub nom., Klamath Tribe v. Oregon, 516 U.S. 943, 116 S.Ct. 378, 133 L.Ed.2d 302 (1995).
- 6 On February 19, 2011, the Tribes’ General Council passed Klamath Tribes General Council Resolution # 2011–011, entitled “General Council Resolution Rescinding General Council Resolution # 2004–002 and Reaffirming General Council Authority Over Claims of the Klamath Tribe.” This resolution rescinded a prior resolution on which plaintiff had relied in asserting that it could litigate the subject case. The February resolution further stated that “the General Council reaffirms that the Claims Committee does not speak for or represent the Klamath Tribes, nor has it ever done so.”
- 7 See also Clinton v. Babbitt, 180 F.3d 1081, 1090 (9th Cir.1998) (“because the Hopi Tribe enjoys sovereign immunity ... it cannot be joined as a party without its consent”); Kescoli v. Babbitt, 101 F.3d 1304, 1310 (9th Cir.1996); Wichita & Affiliated Tribes of Okla. v. Hodel, 788 F.2d 765, 771 (D.C.Cir.1986) (“tribal immunity quickly surfaces as a crucial issue in such a suit since if the tribe is an indispensable party, and cannot be joined due to its immunity, the claim may not proceed”).
- 8 Rule 19 formerly spoke in terms of “necessary” and “indispensable” parties. It was altered in 2007 for “stylistic” reasons but the “substance and operation of the rule ... are unchanged.” Rep. of Philippines v. Pimentel, 553 U.S. 851, 855–56, 128 S.Ct. 2180, 171 L.Ed.2d 131 (2008). The same can be said of the 2008 modification of the language of this court’s rule. For a discussion regarding the evolution of this rule, see Katherine Florey, “Making Sovereign Indispensable, Pimentel and the Evolution of Rule 19,” 58 UCLA L.Rev. 667, 673–76 (2011) (hereinafter “Florey”).
- 9 “In general, the rules of [Court of Federal Claims] are patterned on the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,” making “precedent under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ... relevant to interpret rules of [Court of Federal Claims].” Pac. Nat’l Cellular v. United States, 41 Fed.Cl. 20, 25 n. 3 (1998). As to Rule 19, the Federal Circuit has recently noted that “RCFC 19 is virtually identical to Fed.R.Civ.P.

19” and “[b]ecause our case law on RCFC 19 is limited, we rely on cases interpreting Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 in our analysis of what is a ‘necessary’ party under RCFC 19.” United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee Indians v. United States, 480 F.3d 1318, 1324 n. 2 (Fed.Cir.2007).

10 As the Fifth Circuit indicated shortly after Provident was decided, the essence of Rule 19 is to balance the rights of all those whose interests are implicated by the action:

The plaintiff has the right to “control” his own litigation and to choose his own forum. This “right” is, however, like all other rights, “defined” by the rights of others. Thus the defendant has the right to be safe from needless multiple litigation and from incurring avoidable inconsistent obligations. Likewise the interests of the outsider who cannot be joined must be considered. Finally there is the public interest and the interest the court has in seeing that insofar as possible the litigation will be both effective and expeditious.

Marcus, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1602 (2012).

11 In Pueblo of Laguna v. United States, 60 Fed.Cl. 133 (2004), this court discussed why it believed that district courts lack jurisdiction over matters such as these, stating:

[T]he Federal Circuit, in Consolidated Edison Co. v. United States, 247 F.3d 1378 (Fed.Cir.2001) (en banc), instructed that “[a] party may not circumvent the [Court of Federal Claim’s] exclusive jurisdiction by framing a complaint in the district court as one seeking injunctive, declaratory or mandatory relief where the thrust of the suit is to obtain money from the United States.” Id. at 1385 (quoting Rogers v. Ink, 766 F.2d 430, 434 (10th Cir.1985)); cf. Cobell v. Norton, 240 F.3d 1081, 1094–95 (D.C.Cir.2001). Moreover, the Administrative Procedure Act waives sovereign immunity for district court suits only if “there is no other adequate remedy.” 5 U.S.C. § 704 (2000). Yet, to the extent that these other actions seek an accounting, that remedy is available here as a prelude to the award of monetary damages. See, e.g., Minnesota Chippewa Tribe Red Lake Band v. United States, 768 F.2d 338, 342 (Fed.Cir.1985); Klamath and Modoc Tribes v. United States, 174 Ct.Cl. 483, 486–91 (1966) (construing 28 U.S.C. § 1505); see also United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 219–22, 103 S.Ct. 2961, 77 L.Ed.2d 580 (1983).

More recently, the Federal Circuit has made clear that a compensation award in this court provides most plaintiffs with an “adequate remedy,” thereby precluding a district court from exercising jurisdiction over a related claim under 5 U.S.C. § 704. See Suburban Mortg. Assocs., Inc. v. U.S. Dep’t of Hous. & Urban Dev., 480 F.3d 1116, 1126–27 (Fed.Cir.2007); Consol. Edison Co., 247 F.3d at 1384–85.

State*, 11 F.3d 1341, 1347–48 (6th Cir.1993) (in case involving fishing rights under treaty, equity required case to be dismissed where two absent bands were indispensable where adequate remedy was available); Florey, supra at 684–85 (“cases from the tribal context continue to form the bulk of cases in which courts contemplate dismissal because an immune Rule 19 party cannot be joined”); Fletcher, supra, at 14 (“For the most part, courts dismiss a case when an absent tribe has a significant stake in the outcome of the litigation.”); Nicholas V. 14 Other courts have employed similar reasoning. See also Seneca Nation of Indians v. New York, 383 F.3d 45, 48 (2d Cir.2004), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1178, 126 S.Ct. 2351, 165 L.Ed.2d 278 (2006); Kickapoo Tribe, 43 F.3d at 1496; Florey, supra at 686.

16 Among other things, the Court there cited deference to the comity and dignity interests of the Republic and the Commission “in determining if, and how, the assets should be used to compensate those persons who suffered grievous injury under Marcos” and the desirability of avoiding the “specific affront that could result to the Republic and the Commission if the property they claimed is seized by the decree of a foreign court.” Pimentel, 553 U.S. at 866.

- 17 For nearly two centuries, the Supreme Court has described Indian tribes as “domestic dependent nations.” Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 17, 8 L.Ed. 25 (1831) (Marshall, C.J.); see also United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 204–05, 124 S.Ct. 1628, 158 L.Ed.2d 420 (2004).
- 18 As several courts have noted, it is difficult to determine the preclusive effect of a ruling in later lawsuit. That is particularly true here given the debates regarding the legal relationship between plaintiff and the Tribes. See Huber v. Taylor, 532 F.3d 237, 250 (3d Cir.2008) (“[i]t would be premature for this Court to endeavor to decide whether [the absent party is] in privity in bringing the instant action, for purposes of determining the preclusive effect of this action on a later lawsuit, where the potential later lawsuit is yet to be brought, and where the instant action has not even run its course yet”) (quoting Johnson & Johnson v. Coopervision, Inc., 720 F.Supp. 1116, 1124 (D.Del.1989)).
- 19 While plaintiff and the Tribes dispute the precise contours of the other's membership, they both agree that an award to the other would provide a windfall to unentitled individuals while denying certain entitled individuals a share. Given this, it is apparent that if the Tribes had intervened in this action, the court would have been forced to determine how to allocate any resulting judgment, requiring it to wade into disputes not only between the claimants and the United States, but also among the claimants themselves. See Makah Indian Tribe, 910 F.2d at 559–61 (holding absent tribe was indispensable where case involved “potential intertribal conflict”).
- 20 See also SW. Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Babbitt, 150 F.3d 1152, 1154 (9th Cir.1998); Ramah Navajo School Bd., Inc. v. Babbitt, 87 F.3d 1338, 1351–52 (D.C.Cir.1996); Citizens Against Casino Gambling in Erie County v. Kempthorne, 471 F.Supp.2d 295, 315 (W.D.N.Y.2007).
- 21 To be sure, the court is discomforted by the prospect of dismissing a suit in which the Tribes has claimed that its interests may be impaired, but, nonetheless, has elected not to intervene. But, at least in tribal cases, the weight of authority takes the view that an essential aspect of sovereignty is to decide when not to assert an interest in the suit. See Kickapoo Tribe, 43 F.3d at 1498 (“[f]ailure to intervene is not a component of the prejudice analysis where intervention would require the absent party to waive sovereign immunity”); Pueblo of Sandia v. Babbitt, 47 F.Supp. 49, 54 (D.D.C.1999); cf. School Dist. of City of Pontiac v. Sec'y of U.S. Dept. of Educ., 584 F.3d 253, 281 (6th Cir.2009), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 130 S.Ct. 3385, 177 L.Ed.2d 302 (2010) (“When States stick their heads in the sand for nearly five years of litigation about a high-profile lawsuit, it is difficult to say that proceeding without them will impair their interests—which so far seem focused above all on not being forced to take a public stand on the issues presented.”); see also Florey, supra at 686–87 (“When considering the extent of Rule 19(b) prejudice to a party, some courts have cautioned against attaching any weight to an immune party's failure to intervene.”); One can imagine a number of reasons why politically, legally, tactically or practically, the Tribes may wish not to assert their rights in a given suit. See Fletcher, supra, at 121–123; see generally, Angela Riley, “Good (Native) Governance,” 107 Colum. L.Rev. 1049, 1111–13 (2007) (discussing situations in which tribes have and have not waived their sovereign immunity).
- 22 Because of this ruling, the court will deny, as moot, a motion filed by plaintiff to amend its complaint.

§ 564w-1. Klamath Indian Forest and Klamath Marsh

Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 564d and 564e of this title, and all Acts amendatory thereof—

(a) Designation of boundaries

The tribal lands that comprise the Klamath Indian Forest, and the tribal lands that comprise the Klamath Marsh, shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, jointly.

(b) Sales; terms and conditions

The portion of the Klamath Indian Forest that is selected for sale pursuant to section 564d(a)(3) of this title to pay members who withdraw from the tribe shall be offered for sale by the Secretary of the Interior in appropriate units, on the basis of competitive bids, to any purchaser or purchasers who agree to manage the forest lands as far as practicable according to sustained yield procedures so as to furnish a continuous supply of timber according to plans to be prepared and submitted by them for approval and inclusion in the conveyancing instruments in accordance with specifications and requirements referred to in the invitations for bids: Provided, That no sale shall be for a price that is less than the realization value of the units involved determined as provided in subsection (c) of this section. The terms and conditions of the sales shall be prescribed by the Secretary. The specifications and minimum requirements to be included in the invitations for bids, and the determination of appropriate units for sale, shall be developed and made jointly by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture. Such plans when prepared by the purchaser shall include provisions for the conservation of soil and water resources as well as for the management of the timber resources as hereinbefore set forth in this section. Such plans shall be satisfactory to and have the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture as complying with the minimum standards included in said specifications and requirements before the prospective purchaser shall be entitled to have his bid considered by the Secretary of the Interior and the failure on the part of the purchaser to prepare and submit a satisfactory plan to the Secretary of Agriculture shall constitute grounds for rejection of such bid. Such plans shall be incorporated as conditions in the conveyancing instruments executed by the Secretary and shall be binding on the grantee and all successors in interest. The conveyancing instruments shall provide for a forfeiture and a reversion of title to the lands to the United States, not in trust for or subject to Indian use, in the event of a breach of such conditions. The purchase price paid by the grantee shall be deemed to represent the full appraised fair market value of the lands, undiminished by the right of reversion retained by the United States in a nontrust status, and the retention of such right of reversion shall not be the basis for any claim against the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture shall be responsible for enforcing such conditions. Upon any reversion of title pursuant to this subsection, the lands shall become national forest lands subject to the laws that are applicable to lands acquired pursuant to the Act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended.

(c) Appraisals; notice to Congressional committees; appropriation; realization value; report to Congressional committees

Within sixty days after August 23, 1958 the Secretary of the Interior shall contract by negotiation with three qualified appraisers or three qualified appraisal organizations for a review of the appraisal approved by the Secretary pursuant to section 564d(a)(2) of this title. In such review full consideration shall be given to all reasonably ascertainable elements of land, forest, and mineral values. Not less than thirty days before executing such contracts the Secretary shall notify the chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the names and addresses of the appraisers selected. The cost of the appraisal review shall be paid from tribal funds which are made available for such purpose, subject to full reimbursement by the United States, and the appropriation of funds for that purpose is authorized. Upon the basis of a review of the appraisal heretofore made of the forest units and marsh lands involved and such other materials as may be readily available, including additional market data since the date of the prior appraisal, but without making any new and independent appraisal, each appraiser shall estimate the fair market value of such forest units and marsh lands as if they had been offered for sale on a competitive market without limitation on use during the interval between the adjournment of the Eighty-fifth Congress and the termination date specified in section 564e(b) of this title. This value shall be known as the realization value. If the three appraisers are not able to agree on the realization value of such forest units and marsh lands, then such realization values shall be determined by averaging the values estimated by each appraiser. The Secretary shall report such realization values to the chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs not later than January 15, 1959. No sale of forest units that comprise the Klamath Indian Forest designated pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be made under the provisions of this subchapter prior to April 1, 1959.

(d) Unsold forest units and marsh lands; title after publication in Federal Register; aggregate realization value; appropriation

If all of the forest units offered for sale in accordance with subsection (b) of this section are not sold before April 1, 1961, the Secretary of Agriculture shall publish in the Federal Register a proclamation taking title in the name of the United States to as many of the unsold units or parts thereof as have, together with the Klamath Marsh lands acquired pursuant to subsection (f) of the section, an aggregate realization value of not to exceed $90,000,000, which shall be the maximum amount payable for lands acquired by the United States pursuant to this subchapter. Compensation for the forest lands so taken shall be the realization value of the lands determined as provided in subsection (c) of this section, unless a different amount is provided by law enacted prior to the proclamation of the Secretary of Agriculture. Appropriation of funds for that purpose is authorized. Payment shall be made as soon as possible after the proclamation of the Secretary of Agriculture. Such lands shall become national forest lands subject to the laws that are applicable to lands acquired pursuant to the Act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended. Any of the forest units that are offered for sale and that are not sold or taken pursuant to subsection (b) or (d) of this section shall be subject to sale without limitation on use in accordance with the provisions of section 564d of this title.

(e) Sale of retained lands to Secretary of Agriculture

If at any time any of the tribal lands that comprise the Klamath Indian Forest and that are retained by the tribe are offered for sale other than to members of the tribe, such lands shall first be offered for sale to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be given a period of twelve months after the date of each such offer within which to purchase such lands. No such lands shall be sold at a price below the price at which they have been offered for sale to the Secretary of Agriculture, and if such lands are reoffered for sale they shall first be reoffered to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase such lands subject to such terms and conditions as to the use thereof as he may deem appropriate, and any lands so acquired shall thereupon become national forest lands subject to the laws that are applicable to lands acquired pursuant to the Act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended.

(f) Klamath Marsh National Wildlife Refuge; appropriation

The lands that comprise the Klamath Marsh shall be a part of the property selected for sale pursuant to section 564d(a)(3) of this title to pay members who withdraw from the tribe. Title to such lands is taken in the name of the United States, effective the earliest date after September 30, 1959, when the Secretary of the Interior determines that funds for the payment of the purchase price are available from the sale of stamps under the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, as amended [16 U.S.C. 718 et seq.]. Such lands are designated as the Klamath Marsh National Wildlife Refuge, which shall be administered in accordance with the law applicable to areas acquired pursuant to section 4 of the Act of March 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 451), as amended or supplemented [16 U.S.C. 718d]. Compensation for said taking shall be the realization value of the lands determined in accordance with subsection (c) of this section, and shall be paid out of funds in the Treasury of the United States, which are authorized to be appropriated for that purpose.

(g) Homesites

Any person whose name appears on the final roll of the tribe, and who has since December 31, 1956, continuously resided on any lands taken by the United States by subsections (d) and (f) of this section, shall be entitled to occupy and use as a homesite for his lifetime a reasonable acreage of such lands, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may issue to safeguard the administration of the national forest and as the Secretary of the Interior may issue to safeguard the administration of the Klamath Marsh National Wildlife Refuge.

(h) Administration of outstanding timber sales contracts

If title to any of the lands comprising the Klamath Indian Forest is taken by the United States, the administration of any outstanding timber sales contracts thereon entered into by the Secretary of the Interior as trustee for the Klamath Indians shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(i) Right of United States to use roads

All sales of tribal lands pursuant to subsection (b) of this section or pursuant to section 564d of this title on which roads are located shall be made subject to the right of the United States and its assigns to maintain and use such roads.
